"Couldn't you put me on shore ?" insinuated Fergus.

"Divil a bit of it," says the captain, "I couldn't put back if you was a king."

"Well then," says Fergus, "I'll be a sea man, but sorely against the grain. Betwane 'us now, I'd rather be a fishin'. And so Fergus Leary was entered on board of the Thunderbolt, Captain O'Bangwhang, of Derry.

The voyage passed of as dacintly as possible till they got into Southern latitudes. They'd been in high spirits for some time, and one Friday they made preparations for a dance aboard. The day commenced with light breezes and pleasant weather, and all "drawin' sail was set. So one of the men got is fiddle ready, and, afther he'd rosined up, o it they went like so many Welsh goats on he mountains.

Of course a pleasant day they had of it, nd it's likely it would have continued, if he weather would have been asy and not layin' its pranks. But about eight o'clock n the evenin' it came on squally. The capain ordered them to take in to' ga'nt sail ib, and not satisfied with that made them ouble reef the main-sail, and take in a reef 1 the four-top sail. But the dirty tempest asn't satisfied. The thunder and lightnin' egan (to_roll and to flash, and the squall ame sharper and sharper, till every thing ad to be tuck except the fore top sail.

Och4 then come the war of the elements very stitch of canvass was furled, and bound ose to the spars, while the monsthrous ves d heaved and pitched like a Galway caran on a holiday at twelve o'clock at night, veryhody began to git alarmed, and Fergus nong the rest. All at once the carpenter shed up and announced five feet water in e hold.

. • come up with the first party, but they, did with a second, who immediately followed the example of their illustrious predecessors. There was one exception, however, in the shape of a female. What a beauty she was! She was stupified by fear, and had to surrender at discretion. Some of the party seized her and were handling her rather rudely, when Fergus interfered.

"Git out, ye spalpeenes ! isn't she a faymale? Would ye be after makin' fools of yourselves. Botheration and bluranouns b Ye needn't look so black I can tell ye; let Ten do. go your hoult, or I'll surround the whole of you; let go, I say," and he accompanied his command with a gentle tap on the arm of the most prominent offender. A fight now ensued, one only of the party siding with our hero, but the two were two too many for the four, and bate them clear out intirely. The young girl stood watching the issue of the combat without attempting to move, seeming as if spell-bound, but when it was over she made a clane run of it.— 5. TEN DOLLARS to the person who will procure us the fifth largest list as above. Fergy gave chase and his companions tho't it was'nt wise to follow.

Fergy Leary was said to be a pretty powerful runner, but he had work to keep up with the girl, however, he ran and she ran, till they came to's kind of town, and as she plumped bang into the best house in it, our Fergy plumped right in after her.

What a beautiful place it was too. There was gold and diamonds and other little trifles, and a great throne, and a top of it sat a huge gentleman savage, and around him a lot of as tight dark-skinned boys as Fergus' two eyes ever was laid on. They appeared mightily astonished at his entrance, but the girl said something in her language to the ould man on the throne, and then they all surrounded him and pulled him up. Whoop ! The pumps were forgetten, and "Mister Fergus Leary!" said the king.
