Pruning.

During this and the succeeding fruit trees should the succeeding t the o vianches should invariably be cut low enough to secure live branchs, and if the limb be a large one, it is better to trim it off after the saw with a sharp knife or hatchet. The saw is a poor pruning instrument at the best; with out trimming after it, especially on the out side of the wound; as it will senreely ever heal over, whereas, if the branches are cit with a sharp instrument, and the tree healthy; the surrounding bark will soon cover the wound, and thus avert decay.-The object in pruning, varies with the dif--forent sorts of fruit.

Apples and years, where allowed full scope require thinning merely of weak and cross branches, and all spay cut clean out in the body of the tree. Dwarf and espalier trees require somewhat different pruning, but most of which should be performed in the summer; all that is required at this season, being to shorten in the unproductive shoots of established trees within two or three inches of their length, taking care to preserve the fruit buds, which are readily known by their round and plump form.

Peach Trees are much benefited by pruning, as, if commenced while young, the tree will always remain bushy and "close," while if left to itself; it will become in a short time, an ugly straggling tree with a few bearing shoots at the top. Cut out all weak spindly growth, except where wanted to fill up a vacancy, and shortenin the leading shoots of each branch. We prefer this to shortening the branches we intend to leave. If the tree is inclined to be crowded, a third of the young wood may be taken out with advantage. It is better to leave the pruning of peach trees 'till all excessive cold is past, as the fruit buds in extreme cases are killed by frost; and where this occurs; pruning must be done accordingly.

The native grape vines that have remained uncovered and unpruned, may be done at any time. The fruit will come much finer and suffer less from mildew and other pests if ample space is left for the development of the foliage. Under no pruning should the branches be nearer each other after they are dene than eighteen inches-three feet is better.

Currants and Gooseberries should also be pruned; established trees of the red white currants require the young wood well pruned back; and gooseberries, the last year's wood thinned considerably leaving young wood enough to be free from crowding during summer.

The black current is much neglected in this country. To grow it to perfection requires a moist soil, very rich; in pruning only requires the branches thinned; an occasionally the older ones taken out. -Country Gentleman

Whitewashing Trees.

The assertion has of late been repeatedly advanced in our agricultural and other journals, that the practice of whitewashing fruit and other ornamental trees, is injurious This assertion we consider as having been fully attested by the result of experiments, and by philosphy; yet we find the practice is still continued by many farmers and torraculturists who profess no slight knowledge of physiology and whose experience, extending, as they assert, through a period of many years, one would naturally suppose would be sufficient to convince them of its utter inutility, so far as the growth of trees is concerned, if nothing more. We can suppose that the practice originated, in the necessity of applying some caustic alkaline liquid in order to remove the mosses and other similar parasitical plants which so frequently abound on fruit and other trees, and that having been once introduced, it has been perpetuated under the erroneus and unphilosophical presumption that whitewash is highly efficient and salutary in promoting vegeta-ble health. It is no doubt true that caustic lime, applied to the bark of trees, operates as a powerful stimulous; but it has a tendency to induce a morbid and sickly, not a healthy action in the system, and to impart to the trees an appearance of old age, and of premature decay.-There is a striking analogy between the cuticle, or outer bark of trees, and the epidemier of animals.
