

Little Folks.

CHILDREN BE COURTEOUS.

Your little brother has fallen down;—stop a moment, help him up, brush off his clothes, and speak a kind word to him.

Why should children of the same family indulge in rudeness to each other?—Is it of less importance to have the good opinion of those with whom our lives are spent, than of strangers?

I have no doubt you love your brothers and sisters better than all the rest of the world besides. Why not take the same trouble to make that love felt, to make it bring forth fruit?

There was once a lovely little boy, between two and three years of age, the pet and plaything of the whole house.

At length, unfortunately, the elder brother discovered that the younger was very amusing when he was teased.

Their mother who had watched the course of events, now talked seriously to her eldest child, and advised him to try the effect of gentleness and kindness in recovering the affection of his brother.

Too many children think it is not worth while to be polite to their brothers and sisters. Especially the larger boys think it a mark of manliness to be rude and overbearing to the younger ones.

A thousand little heart burnings and petty disputes, which, although they do not seriously disturb the family, are yet the source of much vexation, might be entirely avoided with a very little trouble.

We were much amused, says an exchange, by an incident which a friend of ours related to us the other day. A gentleman who had been absent for a considerable time, and who, during his absence, had raised a pretty luxuriant crop of whiskers, moustaches, visited a relative, whose child an artless little girl of five or six years—she was very fond of—the little girl made no demonstration towards saluting him with a kiss as usual.

'Why, ma,' returned the little girl with the most perfect simplicity, 'I don't see any place!'
