The Birds.

The common and practical notion concerning birds is, that they are of no great consequence, except for the poetry there is in them. Their songs to be heard and their plumage to be looked at, are very fine things for girls to talk about; but of what use are they? It is true that the papers say, once in a while, that the birds devour a great many insects; but who knows whether it is true or not? Who ever saw any bird eat a caterpillar? and if they will not destroy these, which anybody can catch, who knows whether they are more formidable to others?

With such notions as these, war is made upon all the rates of the feathered tribe. Boys shoot and stone them, and break up their nests, and so annoy and frighten them, that they are everywhere scarce if possible.

Now we have to say again, that all this is bad policy. It is bad because it is very expensive way of doing a thing not desirable to be done. Birds do eat insects. Because Jim Whalebone has not seen martins eat caterpillars, it is not a proof that all birds do not devour any other varieties of insects. The food of birds is as well known as the food of hogs and horses, and Whalebone himself may learn, if he will, what it is. One species of birds devour one sort of insect, and another, another—while other sorts eat only seeds or vegetable food, and others still eat both vegetable and animal food.

What do woodpeckers live upon, for instance? Cannot Jim Whalebone guess? yet he will kill every one he can reach, red-head white-head and yellow-hammer, and think he has done a good deed. We must cultivate the birds or be devoured of insects. As the groves increase and as we cultivate fruit trees, insects increase a thousand fold. Those which have been heretofore confined to the forest will creep out into our orchards and ravage them before we can devise a remedy, if we neglect the antagonisms which nature has provided.

We are put upon this train of remark by observing in the Massachusetts Ploughman a correspondence between a nurseryman at Springfield, in this state, and Dr. S. W. Harris, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. This correspondence reveals the fact that a borer, heretofore common to the forests is now attacking the nurseries and is proving very destructive. Woodpeckers live on borers. The hint may suggest all that is needed.—Prairie Farmer for July.

Action of Lime.

- First. It breaks up the soil, and forms combinations that the plants can render soluble.
- Second. It fixes part of the nitrogen of the atmosphere, forming nitric acid, from it making nitrate of lime.
- Third. Nitric acid contains the same essential elements as ammonia, and is capable of being converted into it or the plant.
- Fourth. Useful directly to a certain extent for the nourishment of the plant.
- Fifth. It is particularly useful on gravelly soils, and on clayey soils devoid of lime.
- Sixth. Lime and barn-yard manure should not be mixed in the barn-yard, inasmuch as the lime causes too sudden decomposition, and consequent loss of ammonia which is driven off by the lime to be received by the air.

Charcoal dust is quite valuable on a manure heap, as it fixes the ammonia and other gasses, which otherwise to a great extent would be wasted. The coal dust should be scattered on when dry; if wet the pores of the coal being filled with water cannot then receive the ammonia.—This fact is valuable to all masters of charcoal furnaces and farmers within five or ten miles of the same, inasmuch as the dust and brues from coal pits—wasted yearly—would benefit very many farmers at a comparatively small cost, if properly applied.

When to Bud trees.

In the month of August, or when the fall sap flows most freely, which depends much upon the season being early or late, with a sharp knife cut a perpendicular incision about an inch long, in the shoot intended to be budded, which must, (or is best to) be of the present summer's growth; then, at the base of the incision, cut a horizontal gash about three-eighths of an inch in length; raise or loosen the bark on each side carefully; then take a bud off a twig of this summer's growth, by cutting across the twig one fourth of an inch below the bud, and along the sides to an apex above the bud, of such a length as to fit the incision prepared for its reception; slip it in carefully under the raised bark; press it carefully together, and bind it with a coarse woollen string above and below the bud, to hold the raised sides firmly down upon the bud; let it remain so for seven or eight days, then cut the string. The next spring cut the top off the twig about an inch above where it was budded. The advantages of budding over grafting are many and obvious—first if it does not grow it will not injure your tree. It grows faster than grafts, and is much quicker and more easily done. I have always had the best of success in budding as described above.
