Agricultural.

General Agricultural Intelligence.

. Office of the Daily Times, NEW YORK, Aug. 8, 1855.

The past week has been one of intense interest, not to farmers only but to every other class of persons. Wheat, upon which millions must rely for their bread during a twelvemonth, had hung balanced upon a single issue, wet or dry weather. Ten days ago not half the wheat crop of the United states has been gathered. Taking the census returns of 1850 as a guide, the four States, Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York and Illinois produced more wheat than all the other States and territories put together. Add to those the States lying in the same latitude, or north of them, and we find that they produce just three-fourths of the entire crop.

If we now include Canada, and take into consideration the great increase of sarface sown to wheat in the newer Northwestern States, such as Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota, and leave out those portions of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, south of the parallel of 40° north latitude, we have in the territory north of 40° more than three-fourths of the wheat crop of the present year.

Last week we stated that the crop south of 40° had all been gathered before the commencement of the rains in good conlition. This was generally true, though we have conversed with gentlemen direct from Southern Ohio, Indiana and IIlinois, who inform us owing to the scarcity of help, the crops were still ungathered in several localities there.

In our last we put down one-third of the crop as gathered before the rain in the belt between 40° and 42° Further intelligence confirms this statement.

The general and continuous rains prevailing up to the close of the week ending July 28, nearly suspended the harvest over the greater part of the territory north of 40° up to that date. Allowing for the portion gathered previous to the rain, and in some localities during its general prevalence, we have at least two-thirds of the entire wheat crop in the fields on Monday of last week.

Since our last report we have carefully gathered and collected every item of intelligence that it was possible to obtrin from the different sections of this vast harvest field.

We have numerous reports of "grown" and "sprouted" wheat, of its being "beat down" and "lying rotting upon the ground," but a careful sifting of these reduces the sum total of injured wheat to less than one-tenth of the entire cropprobably less than one-twentieth. As far as we have heard, not one farmer in a thousand, except in a few of the very worst localities, will admit that he has lost ten bushels out of a hundred, more than he usually loses. We think we are safe in estimating that after the most liberal allowance for injury, not one-twentieth part of the wheat crop of the United States has thus far been lost by the "wet term." How then stands the present prospect?

Adding together the multitudinous reports of unusually productive crops, and subtracting from these all adverse reports, we cannot well estimate the entire yield of 1855 at less than one third greater than that of 1854. We think it will appreach nearer to one-half greater.

If this be a correct estimate, the price of flour must ultimately fall below its present figure The current price is no criterion. It will be some time before farmers, who have been accustomed to "two dollars a bushel," will part with their wheat at a less price than they have than they have become in a measure used to, unless driven to it by stern necessity. Dealers have still on hand considerable quantities of old flour, and they are continuing to use every possible effort to keep up prices till they have clear-ed out their stocks on hand. The rains were a godsend to them, and they still hope for foul weather at home, or unfavorable reports from abroad, to assist them in clearing out without ruinous loss.

'It would seem to be the best policy for wheat raisers to get as much of their grain into market as possible while the present high prices prevail, if they can find purchasers; and when a great depression takes place, to then hold on for a future rise, if such should be the chance result of the European war, or failure of crops there, or of a general destruction of the corn crop, by early frosts or untoward consumption of the country that its great or small yield will have a powerful influence on the price of wheat. At the present time there is a prospect of a larger yield of corn than bas ever been known n this country. In the Southern States housands of plants. n this country. In the Southern States housands of plantations have been changed from cotton to corn the present season, where not enough for home consumption has heretofore been produced, and in the farthest south of these States this crop is now so far forward as to be beyond the reach of an ordinary casualty.

Some scattering reachest states have been known that he has have been the season, where not enough for home consumption has heretofore been produced, and in the farthest south of these States this crop is now so far forward as to be beyond the reach of an ordinary casualty.

Some scattering reports represent corn as "late" or "backward," but as still "promising well;" while, with the exception of these every section of the country from Maine to Texas, furnishes one unvarying series of reports of an "ammenes yield of corn."

The same, or even more, may be said of the potato crop, but the "rot" may yet materially change the present aspect of these reports.
