

THE BRIGGS' BABY.

re don't seem to have done anything either—haint even fixed that corn-crib.

'I don't see how Martha gets along so well, outaoud Mrs. Cornwall, 'doin' all her own work and takin' care of the baby too.'

'She must have a kind of knack at it,' observed Timothy, 'or perhaps the young one naws it can outstep us and takes advantage.'

'Well,' replied his wife with a decided yawn, 'one thing is pretty certain; I shall go to bed afore long, and try to get rested with a good night's sleep—it's a comfort that people can keep.'

And to bed they shortly went; nothing outbuing. Baby behaving beautifully, being wrapped in the calm slumber of innocence and except that the room was too warm, and light in one's eyes not the pleasantest thing in the world, all went on well.

It might have been somewhere near midnight, that Timothy Cornwall awoke to the consciousness of his wife's absence, and a sort of uproar in the apartment. Shaking off the slumbers of the dreamy god, he sat bolt upright and again experienced the pleasant conviction of the baby's existence—which small circumstance he had quite forgotten in the land of dreams.

The child screamed, and then moaned, as if in pain, and twisted frantically on Mrs. Cornwall's lap, as she sat in the low rocking-chair by the fire—the light from the burning logs falling upon her pale and disturbed countenance.

'What is the matter?' exclaimed the husband springing to her side.

'I haven't the least idea,' was her despairing reply, 'I'd give most anything I have in the world if Martha'd only come back.'

'Well, I shouldn't care to see her jest now,' observed Timothy, after gazing upon the child's pale features. 'I'd rather have the baby out of this fix, first, whatever it is.—Aint there nothing we can give it? he continued, anxiously, 'paregoric, or anythin' of that sort?'

'Yes,' replied his wife, brightening up, 'Martha often gives it a little paregoric, 'Jost look on the third shelf of the cupboard, there, in the little, flat bottle, with the broken cork.' Timothy seized the vial, and cautiously dropped the stated number of drops. Baby reared and plunged frightfully, but down it went; and then Mrs. Cornwall tried to trot it into silence.

It was of no use, its screams became terrific; and Sally, who came rushing down from her own dormitory, declared that the child was dying. 'Miss Crimer's baby,' went off jest so—it had fits—and she reckoned that Martha Briggs had seen the last of her!'

'Timothy,' gasped his wife, with a prophetic vision of the officers of justice, and the galleys before her, 'go for the doctor, do! don't lose a minute!'

A heavy autumnal rain was falling—a soaking, penetrating rain; but Timothy performed a hasty toilet, and hastened to saddle the old white mare. It was pitch dark, and he found himself sinking in mud and mire—the rain beat down unmercifully—and even Timothy's equable temper gave way. He felt about cautiously, grasped the fence, and after tearing his hands with old nails, he banged up directly against the barn door. The shock almost destroyed his equilibrium; but, remembering there was a dying baby in the house, and that baby didn't even belong to them, he made extraordinary efforts, and succeeded, at last in getting hold of the horse. The old lady by no means approved of having her slumbers thus disturbed, and gave her master considerable trouble; but, once fairly on her back, he resolved to fly for his very life.

He led her carefully around to the front of the house, where he was met by Sally, who came to tell him that Mrs. Cornwall was all most in hysterics—he had given the baby poison instead of paregoric—and if it got over one trouble, it would certainly die of the other.

Even Sally was excited; and poor Timothy, half dead with terror, galloped off to the doctor's which was two miles from home. He trembled with a thousand undefined terrors, and became so weak from fright, that he fairly slipped from the old mare's back into the muddy road. Splashed from head to foot, and completely chilled, the poor man crawled up again, and urged his steed forward. Dripping and exhausted he arrived, a most pitiable looking object, at Dr. Camomile's door.

Now the doctor was not at all cross at being disturbed—quite the contrary, for patients were scarce at Hornetsville; and it was generally averred that he slept with one eye open, to be ready for emergencies. He received Mr. Cornwall with an appearance of subdued delight; and prepared to accompany him without delay.

'A sad case,' he remarked, as he packed his saddle-bag, 'but medical skill often works wonders.'

Timothy's teeth fairly chattered on his homeward route; and an unpleasant sensation in his bones seemed to say that the storm had taken a firm grip of him, this time.

As they approached the dwelling a crowd was visible around it, lanterns flashed in all directions, and flames were pouring from one of the chimneys. 'The Hornetsville Engine Company,' who seldom had an opportunity to display their skill, were out in full force and fairly deluging the house with water; the neighbors were all collected, for it was whispered about that the Briggs' baby had been poisoned, and, altogether, there had scarcely been such an excitement in the place 'within the memory of the oldest inhabitant.'

Timothy dashed through the crowd followed by the doctor; and, having reached his own apartment, found it to be the very spot where the fire had originated. The accumulated soot in the chimney, which had now been in disuse for a long while, caught the flames that ascended from the hearth, and bid fair, at first to reduce the house to ashes. But the rain and the engine together soon extinguished these; although the company continued to work hard, as if loth to stop the amusement; and the inmates were really in more danger from the element of water than of fire.

Doctor Camomile regarded the baby attentively for a moment or two; it looked pale and sick, but these were no evidences of poison; and Timothy Cornwall and his wife were far more pitiable objects. He called for the vial from which Timothy had taken the dose administered; and, after examining it carefully, pronounced it to be neither poison nor paregoric, but a perfectly harmless mixture for seasoning mince-pies, in which the chief ingredients were cloves and brandy. He inquired concerning its supper, and pronounced the child to be suffering from improper feeding; and, having received something from the saddle bag the baby went to sleep.

The neighbors crowded round the doctor, when he appeared at the door, and received his assurance that there was nothing of any importance the matter with the child; and then, as the flames had quite disappeared, they all dispersed to their respective homes.

Timothy's wretched plight now called for much sympathy from his wife, who put forth all her remaining strength to help him on with another suit; and then they both sat down and watched Sally, who was bailing out the water that had been poured down the chimney, and grumbling as she did so.

'This carpet'll hev to come up, Miss Cornwall,' she continued, 'and that's jest about the gist of it. The walls is ruined, and I guess we've all caught our deaths—and all for that there plaguey little baby!'

The next day, and while yet some distance from home, Sam and Martha were electrified by exaggerated accounts of the fire at Deacon Cornwall's: house burnt to the ground—Mrs. Cornwall barely escaped in her night clothes. The cars fairly seemed to crawl, and eagerly waiting for them to stop, our terrified travelers rushed to the spot, and found, to their surprise, the house still standing.

The young mother burst in upon poor Mrs. Cornwall, and demanded her child in a frenzied tone; and when it was placed in her arms she cried and laughed over it alternately, and went quite off in a fit of hysterics.

'Well,' exclaimed Sam, 'I'll never go and leave the child with any one again, as long as I live!'

'If you do,' replied Tim, bluntly, 'you must find some one else to leave it with—we wont undertake it at any price!'

A few days afterward, our friend Timothy sat in a cushioned chair, with one foot in a pudding bag, composed of wool and flannel, the putting of said foot to the ground being a physical impossibility, and the acute twinges of rheumatism flying all over him. His wife caught a violent ague in her face from the wet room; and now sat swathed in clothes, like a mummy, echoing every one of Timothy's groans with interest.

'Oh, I'm so thankful,' exclaimed Mrs. Cornwall, after a scriver twinge than usual, 'that the baby was Martha's and not ours, after all!'

'I shouldn't live long, if it was ours,' replied Timothy, 'and I never want to see that or any other baby again!'

A NOISY FELLOW.—A curious point of law has just been decided in England by a country judge, in Exeter. The question was whether an inhabitant of a town was at liberty to keep animals whose noise proved a serious annoyance to their neighbors. It was shown, on the part of a Mr. Abraham, that his neighbor, Mr. Minty, had a cock which crowed one hundred and fifty times in twenty-five minutes. The learned judge thought this was an amount of crowing which human nature was not bound to put up with, and awarded to the plaintiff its damages.

THE DISPOSAL OF THE DEAD.—Prentice, of the Louisville Journal, gives the geography of burial and burning:—'A South Carolina editor inquires whether burning or burying is the better. If we were to die in Kentucky, we should prefer to have our remains mingle with her glorious soil—but if we were so unfortunate as to draw our last breath in South Carolina, we should prefer burning by all means.'

A REMARKABLE MAN.—A correspondent of the Kentucky Statesman gives the following account of an old citizen of Pulaski county, named Elijah Deny, who is perhaps the oldest man in Kentucky. He was one hundred and eighteen years of age on the tenth of September, and is as active as any man at forty. He works daily upon a farm, and throughout his whole life has been an early riser. He informed the writer that he had never drunk but one cup of coffee, and that was in the year 1848. He served seven years in the war of the Revolution, and was wounded at the siege of Charleston; he was also at the siege Savannah and the battle of Botaw Springs; he was also present at the battles of Camden, King's Mountain and Monk's Corner. He was under Colonel Horry and Colonel Marion, and was an eye-witness of the sufferings and death of Colonel Isaac Hayne, of South Carolina, an early victim of the Revolution. He is sprightly and active, and would be taken at any time to be a man of middle age. He is a strict member of the Baptist Church, and rides six miles to every meeting of his church. He has four sons and five daughters, all living, the oldest being now in his seventy-eighth, and the youngest in his fifty-first year. Such is a brief sketch of this aged soldier and republican, who is, perhaps, the only surviving soldier of Francis Marion, Sumpter and Horry.

A CUP OF COFFEE.—Henry Ward Beecher has a "realizing sense" of what good coffee is. He writes thus:—"Breakfast is ready. A most useful and salutary custom is that of breakfast. One may work with the hand without breakfast, but not with the head—the machine must be wound up. The blue must be taken out of your spirits, and the grey out of your eyes. A cup of coffee—real coffee—home-brewed, home-ground, home-made that comes to you as dark as a hazel eye, but changes to a golden bronze as you temper it with cream, from its birth, thick, tenderly yellow, perfectly sweet, neither lumpy nor frothing on the Java; such a cup of coffee is a match for twenty blue devils, and will exorcise them all. Involuntarily one draws in his breath by the nostrils. The fragrant savor fills his senses with pleasure—for no coffee can be good in the mouth that does not first send a sweet offering of odor to the nostrils."

HERRING'S PATENT, CHAMPION FIRE PROOF SAFES, with Herring's Patent Powder Proof Locks, which were awarded separate Medals at the World's Fair, London, 1851, and also at the World's Fair, New York, 1853 and '54. The subscribers are the sole manufacturers and proprietors in this State of the above unequalled Safes and Locks. The reputation of the genuine "Herring's Safe" is world wide, and for the last thirteen years the mercantile community have witnessed and borne testimony to their SEVEN FOLD fire proof qualities. More than 12,000 of these Safes have been netely sold, and over two HUNDRED have passed triumphantly through accidental fires. The public are assured that all safes manufactured by the subscribers are not only guaranteed to be fully equal, but in many respects even superior to those which have been so successfully tried by fire. Few will forget their services in the burning of the Tribune establishment, New York, and at the Great Fire in Strawberry street, at the large fire last July, opposite the Grand Hotel; and still more recently in the Fire at Fifth and Chestnut Sts., in the city of Philadelphia, in which these Safes came forth the acknowledged CHAMPION, when many other securities failed. MATCHES! MATCHES!—JOHN A. DONNELLY, manufacturer and inventor of SAFES AT THE GREAT SQUARE LIGHT WEIGHT MATCHES No. 100 North FULTON STREET (above Race) PHILADELPHIA. Matches having become an indispensable article in housekeeping, the subscriber offers a great sacrifice of time and money, is enabled to offer to the Public an article of once combining Utility and cheapness. The inventor knowing the danger apprehended on account of the flimsy manner in which Matches are generally packed in paper, has by the aid of New Steam Machinery, his own invention, succeeded in getting up a SAFETY PATENT SQUARE LIGHT WEIGHT MATCH BOX, which is far preferable, in as much that it occupies no more room than the old round wood box, and contains at least 250 hundred per Cent more Matches, which is shipped in considerable quantities, and is of iron, and secure against moisture and spontaneous combustion, dispelling all danger on transportation by means of Railroad, Steam boat or any other mode of Conveyance. These Matches are packed so that one gross or more may be shipped to any part of the World with perfect safety. They are the most desirable article for Home Consumption, and the Southern and western market that have ever been invented. DEALERS AND SHIPPERS, will do well to call and examine for themselves. These Matches are WARRANTED to be superior to anything heretofore offered to the Public. JOHN DONNELLY, 100 North FOURTH ST. Philad'a. Phila. Dec'r 4, 1854.
