

Revolutionary Sketch

RETREAT FROM LONG ISLAND.

An Incident of the Revolution.

The second volume of Irving's Life of George Washington has just appeared. Although largely occupied by military affairs, the volume contains many fine sketches of private character, and life like pictures of American society as it was in the time of the Revolution.

Never did retreat require greater secrecy and circumspection. Nine thousand men, with all the munitions of war, were to be withdrawn from before a victorious army, encamped so near that every stroke of spade and pick-axe from their trenches could be heard.

Washington made the preparatory arrangements with great alertness yet profound secrecy. Verbal orders were sent to Col. Hughes, who acted as quartermaster-general, to impress all water-craft, large and small from Spytudeen Duivel, on the Hudson, round to Hell Gate, on the Sound, and have them on the East side of the city by evening.

To prepare the army for a general movement without betraying the object, orders were issued for the troops to hold themselves in readiness for a night attack upon the enemy. The orders roused surprise, for the poor fellows were exhausted, and their arms rendered nearly useless by the rain; all, however, prepared to obey, but several made unobedient wills, as is customary among soldiers on the eve of a sudden and deadly peril.

According to Washington's plan of retreat, to keep the enemy from discovering the withdrawal of the Americans until their main body should have embarked in the boats and pushed off from the shore, Gen. Mifflin was to remain at the line with the Pennsylvania troops, and the gallant remains of Haslet, Smallwood and Hand's regiments, with guards posted and sentinels alert, as if nothing extraordinary was taking place, when the main embarkation was effected, they were themselves to move off quietly, march briskly to the ferry and embark.

It was late in the evening when the troops began to retire from the breastworks. As one regiment quietly withdrew from their station on guard, the troops on the right and left moved up and filled the vacancy. There was a stifled murmur in the camp, unavoidable in a movement of the kind; but it gradually died away in the direction of the river, as the main body moved on in silence and order.

What, with the greatness of the stake, the darkness of the night, the uncertainty of the design, and the extreme hazard of the issue, adds the same writer, it would be difficult to conceive a more deeply solemn and interesting scene.

The meaning of this midnight gun was never ascertained; fortunately, though it startled the Americans, it failed to rouse the British camp.

In the meantime the embarkation went on with all possible dispatch, under the vigilant eye of Washington, who stationed himself at the ferry, superintending every movement.

confusion at the ferry, and in the midst of it Gen. Mifflin came down with the whole covering party, adding to the embarrassment and uproar.

'Good God! Gen. Mifflin! cried Washington, 'I am afraid you have ruined us by so unseasonably withdrawing the troops from the lines.'

'I did so by your order,' replied Mifflin, with some warmth. 'It cannot be!' exclaimed Washington. 'By A—, I did!' was the blunt rejoinder. 'Did Sommel act as aid-de-camp for the day or did he not?' 'He did,' then, said Mifflin, 'I had orders through him.' 'It is a dreadful mistake,' rejoined Washington; 'and, unless the troops can regain the lines before their absence is discovered by the enemy, the most disastrous consequences are to be apprehended.'

Mifflin led back his men to the lines, which had been completely deserted for three-quarters of an hour. Fortunately, the dense fog had prevented the enemy from discovering that they were unoccupied. The men resumed their former posts, and remained at them until called to cross the ferry. 'Whoever has seen troops in a similar situation,' writes Gen. Heath, 'or duly contemplates the human heart in such trials, will know how to appreciate the conduct of these brave men on this occasion.'

The fog which prevailed all this time seemed almost providential. While it hung over Long Island, and concealed the movement of the Americans the atmosphere was clear on the New York side of the river. The adverse wind, too, died away; the river became so smooth that the row-boats could be laden almost to the gunwale, and a favoring breeze sprang up for the sail-boats. The whole embarkation of troops, ammunition, provisions, cattle, horses and carts was happily effected; and, by daybreak, the greater part had safely reached the city—thanks to the aid of Glover's Marblehead men. Sooner anything was abandoned to the enemy, excepting a few heavy pieces of artillery. At a proper time Mifflin, with his covering party, left the lines, and effected a silent retreat to the ferry. Washington, though repeatedly entreated, refused to enter a boat until all the troops were embarked, and crossed the river with the last.

TOOTH-PULLING ILLUSTRATION.—Before the days of Chloroform there was a quack who advertised 'tooth-drawing without pain.' The patient was placed in the chair, and the instrument applied to the tooth with a wrench followed by a roar from the unpleasantly surprised sufferer. 'Stop,' cried the dentist, 'compose yourself. I told you that I would give you no pain, but I only just gave you that twang as a specimen to show you Cartwright's method of operating.' Again the instrument was applied, another tug, another roar. 'Now don't be impatient, that is Dumergo's way; be seated and calm, you will now be sensible of the superiority of my method.' Another application another tug, another roar. 'Now pray be quiet, that is Parkinson's mode, and you don't like it no wonder.' By this time the tooth hung by a thread; and when it was pulled out, the operator exultingly exclaimed, 'That is my method of tooth-drawing without pain, and you are enabled to compare it with the operations of Cartwright, Dumergo and Parkinson.'

THE LESSONS OF LIFE.—Great calamities teach us many beautiful lessons, and reveal to us much we should never have seen from the common level of life. A flood, a famine, a conflagration, or some great desolation, shows how much real goodness there is upon the surface of everyday life; how much generous feelings and kindly sympathies, and points of union and practical fellowship, lie below the differences of political opinion, and religious faith, and the prejudices and antagonisms of party and sect—shows us, that beneath all these, the noblest elements of our human nature still live; and wait only the impulse of occasion, to spring into life and action, and to discover to us how much more there is in man to honor and love, than the ordinary aspects of life lead us to suppose. The world, after all, in many things, is better than we take it to be.

PAT'S IDEA OF A CHEAP NEWSPAPER.—A gentleman visiting his estates in Ireland, was standing in a field noticing work that was being done, when he overheard Phelim telling Pat of some terrible intelligence from the seat of war. The news seemed so astounding that Pat couldn't quite make up his mind to swallow the whole of this without some further authority; so he inquires—'An' faith, where did ye get hold of the intelligence?' 'Och! an' didn't I rade iv'ry blessed word in the chape newspaper that's printed in the neighboring town.'

'An' d'ye believe what ye see in the chape prents?' inquired Pat. 'An' why shouldn't ye believe that as well as other? It's a gentleman as prents it.'

'Because, by faith, I don't think they can afford to spake to truth for the money,'

BETTER GET 'EM FIRST.—About 35 years ago there resided in the town of Hebron a certain Dr. T., who became enamored of a beautiful young lady, resident in the same town. The Doctor was a strong Presbyterian, and his lady was a decided Baptist. They were sitting together one evening, talking of their approaching nuptials, when the Doctor remarked: 'I am thinking, my dear, of two events which I shall number among the happiest of my life.'

'And what may they be, Doctor?' remarked the lady. 'One is the hour when I shall call you wife for the first time.'

'And the other?' 'It is when we shall present our first-born for baptism.'

'What! sprinkled?' 'Yes, My dear, sprinkled.'

'Never shall a child of mine be sprinkled! But mine shall!' 'They shall be, hey?' 'Yes, my love! Well, sir, then I can tell you that your babies won't be my babies. So good night, sir.'

The Lafayette (Ind.) Journal publishes the following frigid extract from a reply by a Bogue county subscriber to a dunning letter: 'Sorry to say Old Hoss that I can't pay. I am very tight up, which is to say, I haint nary red. Ef I had Oil was ten cents a barrel I couldn't buy enough to grease my har. Don't worry about it, I freely forgive you the debt.'

I have very little respect for the ties of this world, as the rogue said, with the rope about his neck.
