The World would be the Better for it If men cared less for wealth and fame, And less for battle fields and glory; . If writ in human hearts a name .... Seeined better than in song and story; If men, instead of nursing pride, Would learn to to hate it and abhor it; If more relied . -

On love to guide, The world would be the hotter for it. If men dealt in stocks and lands, And more in bonds and deeds fraternal; If love's work had more willing hands To link this world to the supernal; If men stored up love's oil and wine And on bruised human hearts would pour it; If " yours" and " mine" Would but combine, . The world would be the better for it.

If men were wise in little things, Affecting less in all their dealings; If hearts had fewer rusted strings To isolate their kindly feelings: Wound strike together and restore it: If right made might . In overy fight, The world would be the better for it.

The Loss of the Ship John Rutledge. Frightful Narrative of Suffering.

The New York Times gives the following additional particulars of the loss of the John. Rutledge:

The Germania, a packet ship, commanded by Cuptain Wood, sailed from Havre on the 29th of January. She encountered severe westerly gales during the entire passage:

Some days, of course, were worse than others. A hurricane of unusual violence, .came from the South, and met her. She braved its fury for twelve hours, but her sails were blown out of the gaskets. The barometer stood at 27° 50' when the hurricane commenced. Aftor it terminated, othe gales from the West, violent though they were, seemed almost as zephyre in comparison.

The westerly gales continued, and sourcely at all till in latitude 45° 8' N., and longitude 46° 40' W., the Germania fell in with icebargs. These were large, but scattered; but the intense cold prevailing showed that a large field of ice was in the neighborhood. Shortly before dusk, a fog which had prevailed for some time, cleared away, and a field of ice presented itself of enormous extent. stretchto the northeast as far as the telescope could penetrate. The danger to the ship was fearfully imminent; but by standing away immediately to the southeast she escaped direct. peril, and in about three hours got plear of it altogether. In her Southern course, however. she still had ice in view. As-far South as latitude 42° 43'N., and longitude 50° 28' W., icebergs were vistble between her and the horizon. Gradually they grew less and less numerous, till, after having penetrated far enough to the South, she once more turned herself towards the American coast.

The horrors of her voyage were yet to come. On Feb. 28, a ship's boat was observed in the distance, rowed or steered by no individual dry. although human beings were plainly seen from the forecastle of the Germania. She rose and fell with the waves, and was evidently at their mercy. 'Capt. Wood foreboded a tragedy, and lost no time in dispatching a boat to the resque of the sufferers on board the little drift. ing craft. When it was reached a very shocking spectacle presented itself, and one which will never be forgotten by those on whose eyes it fell.

There were five people in the bort, of whom four-and one of those a woman-were dead. . A young seaman, aged 23 years, Thomas W. Nye, of New Bedford, sat among the bodies of his more unfortunate companions, his hands and feet terribly frozen, and his strength alto gether exhausted by starvation. He could not rise without assistance; he could not movehis feet when he had risen. . They lifted him with care into the Germania's boat, and rowed back to the ship. Then they learned from the young sailor the whole of the terrible tra-

The packet ship John Rutledge, commanded by Captain Kelly, of this city, and owned by Messrs. Howland & Ridgeway, sailed from Liverpool on January the 16th. She met with severe weather, and fell in with ice, on Feb. 18, in lat. 45° 84' N., lon. 46° 56' W. The his story, and Capt. Wood humanely resolved following day, about noon, she entered a field of ice, but cleared it. A few hours later she was precipitated against an iceberg, which poured in a volume. At sunset she was evidently sinking, and had to be hastily aban doned. Besides the crew, there were 119 passengers on board. When she sailed from Livbutter class of emmigrants than those which young Nye, will have been rescued out of all pared to supply country Merchants with nails at the passengers and crew of the packet ship manufacturers prices.

the bottom, her five boats were llowered, and s many of the passengers and crew as could find their way into them immediately did so What food could be snatched up, in the extremity of desperation, was placed in the boats, together with demijohns of water and compasses. Men, women and children were huddled together, with no more covering than they had on them at the time of the encounter, and well nigh paralyzed with terror. The weather was very murky. A thick fog fell upon the heaving waves. When the last boat, the one found by the Germania-was nearly full, and as the mate, Mr. Atkinson, and several others were about stepping in, it broke adrift, with the thirteen persons already in it, and the mate and his companions went down with the wreck. A wild ory rose: the five boots paried company: the shades of night eveloped the ocean; and when the morning broke, after many hours of suffering, the boat in which the young seaman Nye, had escaped, was alone upon the waves, with nothing in view but distant icebergs. Soon some loose floating ice was encountered, which greatly impeded her progress, and in the struggle of those who rowed her to get free from it, the compass which was on board was broken and rendered useless. Clouds overspread the sky, and a thick snow storm succeeded. They know not which way to pull, and were seized with dismay From the haste in which they were compelled to leave the sinking ship, they had only been able to place on board a few bounds of small biscuit, and a demijohn containing about a gallon of water. A small piece of biscuit was the daily ration appointed for each individual, and a draught of water could not be permitted to any one. A suck through the cork was all that could be allowed, and if any one obtained enough for a swallow. the demijohn was immediately taken from him, and he was deprived of his evening's suck The consequence was, that on the first day out all on board were tormented with a raging thirst, which hourly grew more frightand there was no sail, and neither of the other bonts visible. Rain and snow fell, and the unfortunate creatures were nearly frozen with cold, in addition to the pangs of hunger and thirst. They kept up bravely, however, cheebrave. They always are when in trying cir-

Day after day passed by, and on the fifth day, a woman, the wife of one of the passengers, died. They had no shroud to wrap her in, so they threw her overboard in her clothes. The bearts of the surviving twelve the washing is undertaken; and if the house began to fail in carnest then. Many were in and children are neat and tidy, the house a sinking condition, though they had tried to conceal it, but the sight of the first corpse plunged overboard unmanned them. The next day the husband of the woman died, and they threw him overboard. A huge shark had followed them for two days past, and when this second body was consigned to the waves, he dived deeply after it, and disappeared. That evening the provisions failed. There were no more biscuits, and the demijohn was sucked e: ;

Early on the morning of the seventh day, wo boys who were brothers, died, and shortly afterwards their father. There were three sharks in the wake of the boat now, but after these three bodies were thrown overboard, there was only one visible, and he soondropped away and disappeared. Some time during that night another passenger died. They threw him over at day-break.

On the eighth day the boatswain died. Hinr they threw overboard. All that were thrown overboard were in their wearing apparel, and were so disposed of, just as they died. On the same day another passenger died, who was the last that was thrown overboard. Mrs. Atkinson, the mate's wife, died about two hours later, and after her, in quick succession, three other passengers. The young seaman Nye was the sole survivor, and he was so much exhausted that he had not strength to give his dead companions to the sharks. He sat frozen in their midst, and the boat dritted at the mercy of the winds and waves.

On the ninth day, the Germania came in sight, but he had not power to hail her, or to wave a signal. The drifting boat as we have said, was fortunately espied, and the poor young fellow was received on board. He told to look after the other bonts. For two days he sailed to the Northwest and Southwest, keeping watch. Thick snow storms fell dustove a hole in her bow, into which the water ring this time, but when they were cleared away there were no boats to be seen. They had compasses on board. They had, more food than the ill-fated boat, from which Mr. Nye was rescued. But the weather was them met with an accident before the ice was encountered, and died in consequence. There painful conjecture. We trust that we shall was only one cabin passenger: all the root was only one cabin passenger; all the rest hear something of them. > Another terrible hurricane was experienced by the Gemania on March 11, which lasted three days, driving her back 150 miles into the Gulf stream. Captain Wood adds his testimony to that of the many experienced commanders who have lately crossed the Atlantic, respecting the unexampled severity of the weather during the present winter. We expect to receive frightful tidings from sea for some weeks yet to come.

> Very few tragedies, the recital of which has harrowed the feelings of our community, have been more painful than this of the John Rutledge. We should have been able to prosent a more complete account of the calamity if our informant, the young seaman aforesaid. had been in a convalescent state. He is confined to his berth and suffers much from the result of long exposure to cold, and from the exhaustion, consequent upon so many days deprivation of nourishment. At times, he is quite delirious, and in his best condition is unable to narrate much, or to bear much. questioning. ### WASHING DAY.

To how many housewives is this a day of fatigue not only, but of fretfulness and discomfort, making home anything but attractive to either husband or children, when, with proper care and regulations, nearly all of this might be obviated. What is wanted mainly, is a habit of system.

"Let the day as far as possible be regular; and much is generally gained, we think, by choosing Tuesday for this work. There is still ample time left for the clothes to be dried, ful and unendurable. The second day dawned ironed and mended, while it gives a proparation day, without violating the sanctity of the Sabbath.

The work will be greatly lightened if the clothes are sorted, and most of them put to soak the night previously. If a washing prepararing each other. The woman especially were tion is used (and, amid the great number sold, there are a few which are, doubtless, an aid to the washer, and not injurious to the clothes.) shis should be got in readiness on Monday . Many of the little jobs which a family always require done the first of the week. can also be done by this arrangement before wife is better prepared for other duties.

; Everything should be kept in its place. The clothes line should be housed till the day it is wanted, and then stretched upon its appropriate frame, which should of course be kept in order; the tubs should not be left standing about, but kept clean and neat in the cellar .-The boiler clothes-bag, and clothes pins, etc., should all have been left in place and in order for use the week previous, and much time will thus have been gained.

Do not strive to outdo the neighbors by get ting your clothes out the earliest, for this is a very poor ambition; but do up the morning work as neat as usual, and have the vegetables prepared for dinner, so as to have less interruptions; then you can set about the washing with more satisfaction than otherwise. -By a little care the 'slopping,' which so many seem to think necessary, can be avoided, and
