Miscellaneous.

From Graham's Magazine. The Perfection of Police Machinery.

The following curious anecdotes were related by an intelligent foreign minister to show was carried under the French Government :-A merchant of high respectability in Bordeaux had occasion to visit the metropolis upon commercial business, carrying with himbills and money to a very large amount.

On his arrival at the gates of Paris, a genteel looking man opened the door of his carringe, and addressed him to this effect: " Sir. I have been waiting for you for some time. According to my notes, you were to arrive at this hour; and your person, your carriage, and your portmanteau, exactly answer the enna was conducted, insisted that this offendescription I hold in my hand. You will per- der must still be in Paris; otherwise the Emmit me to have the honor of conducting you peror would not have commanded him to to Monsieur de Sartine."

The gentleman, astonished and alarmed at this interruption, and still more so at hearing the name of the lieutenant of police mention ed, demanded to know what Monsieur de Sar tine-wanted with him; adding, at the same time, that he never had committed any offence against the laws, and that he could have no right to interrupt or detain him.

The messenger declared himself perfectly ignorant of the cause of the detention; stating at the same time; that when he had conducted him to Mons. de Sartine, he should have exeouted his orders, which were merely ministe-

After some further explanations, the gentleman permitted the officer to conduct him accordingly. Mons. de Sartine received him with great politeness; and; after requesting him to be scated, to his great astonishment, he described his portmantenu, and told him. the exact sums in bills and specie which he had brought with him to Paris, and where he was to lodge, his usual time of going to bed, and a number of other circumstances, which the gentleman had conceived could only be known to himself. Mons de Sartine, having thus excited attention, put this extraordinary question to him : "Sir, are you a man of courage?" The gentleman, still more astonished at the singularity of such an interrogatory, demanded the reason why he put such a strange question, adding, at the same time, that no man ever doubted his courage. Mone. de Sartine replied, "Sir, you are to be robbed and murdered this night! . If you are a man of courage, you must go to your hotel, and retire to rest at the usual hour; but be careful that you do not fall asleep. Neither will Uther Waifs-Let it be deep." it be proper for you to look under the bed, or into any of the closets which are in your bedchamber;" which he accurately described. "You must place your portmanteau in its "usual situation near your bed, and discover no suspicion. Leave what remains to me. If, . however, you do not feel your courage sufficient to bear you out. I will procure a person who shall personate you, and go to bed, in your stead."---

After some further explanation, which convinced the gentleman that Mons. de Sartine's intelligence was accurate in every particular, · he refused to be personated, and formed an immediate resolution literally, to follow the directions he had received. He accordingly went to bed at his usual hour, which was eleven o'clock. 'At half past twelve, (the time mentioned by Mons. de Sartine,) the door of the bed-chamber burst open, and three men entered with a dark lantern, daggers and pistols. The gentleman, who, of course, was awake, perceived one of them to be his own servant. They rifled his portmanteau undisturbed, and settled the plan of putting him to death. The gentleman hearing all this, and not knowing by what means he was to be rescued, it may be naturally supposed, was under great perturbation of mind, during such an awful interval of suspense; when, at the moment the villains were preparing to commit the horrid deed, four police officers, act ing under Mons. de Sartine's orders, who were concealed under the bed, and in the closet, rushed out and seized the offenders with the property in their possession, and in the act of preparing to commit the murder.

The consequence was, that the perpetration of the atrodous deed was prevented, and suf-ficient evidence was obtained to convict the offenders. Mons. de Sartine's intelligence enabled him to prevent this horrid offence of robbery and marder; which, but for the accuracy of the system, would probably have been carried into execution.

Another anecdote was mentioned by the same minister relative to the Emperor Joseph the Second. That monarch having, in the year 1787, formed and promulgated a new code of laws relative to criminal and civil offences; and having also established what he conceived to be the best system of police in Europe, he could scarcely even forgive the French nation, in consequence of the accuramy and intelligence of Mons. de Sartine having been found somuch superior to his own notwithstanding the immense pains he had bestowed on that department of his governm n'.

A very notorious offender, who was a subject of the emperor, and who committed many trocious acts of violence and depredation, at Vienna, was traced to Paris by the police established by his majesty, who ordered his ambassador at the court of France to demand the perfection to which the system of espionage that this delinquent should be delivered up to > Mous, de Sartine acknowledged to the Imperial ambassador, that the person he inquired-after-had been at Puris : that if it would be any satisfaction he could inform him where he had lodged, and the different gaming tables and other places of infamous resort which ie had frequented while there; but that he was now gone.

The ambassador, after stating the accuracy and correct mode by which the police of Vimake such an application.

Mons. de Sartine smiled at the incredulity of the imperial minister, and made a reply to the following effect:

"Do me the honor, sir, to inform the empeor, your master, that the person he looks for left Paris on the tenth day of the last month; and is now lodged in a back room, looking into a garden, in the third story of a house, number 93, in -- st., in his own capital of Vienna; where his majesty will, by sending to the spot, be sure to find him." It was literally as the French minister of police had stated. The Emperor, to his astonishment, found the delinquent in the house and apartment described; but he was greatly mortified at this proof of the accuracy of the French police; which, in this instance, in point of intelligence, even in Vienna, was discovered to be so much superior to his own.

A DILEMMA. When the ship Meredith was discovered to be leaking, an Irish sailor was employed at the pump-but first looked over the rail to see how high the water was on the side of the vessel. After pumping an hour, he took another peep over the side, and finding the vessel was four inches deeper than when he began, he shouted: "Arrah, now, captain dear, I shall soon pump the sea full at this rate; for I have raised it four inches already !"
