

Humorous.

A Rich Passage from "Little Dorrit."

Harper's Magazine for June contains four chapters of Dickens's new novel—"Little Dorrit." In order to give an understanding of the annexed passage, we must explain a little. Be it understood, that Mrs. Chivery's son John is in love with Little Dorrit, and has recently been rejected by that slight female personage, who we suspect, has a slight affection for Mr. Cennam, whose presence has been begged by Mrs. Chivery in the hope that in his wisdom would be found aid and comfort for her son John, who in the first words of the dialogue following she proposes to point out to her visitor:

"You may see him now," said she, "if you will condescend to take a peep."

With these mysterious words, she preceded the visitor into a little parlor behind the shop with a little window in it commanding a very little dull back yard. In this yard a wash of sheets and table cloths tried (in vain, for want of air) to get itself dried on a line or two; and among those flapping articles was sitting in a chair, like the last mariner left alive on the deck of a damp ship without the power of furling the sails, a little, we begone, young man.

"Our John," said Mrs. Chivery.

Not to be deficient in interest, Cennam asked what he might be doing there?

It's the only change he takes," said Mrs. Chivery, shaking her head afresh. "He won't go out, even in the back yard, when there's no linen; but when there's linen to keep the neighbors' eyes off, he'll sit there hours. Hours, he will. Says he feels as if it was groves?" Mrs. Chivery shook her head again, put her apron in a motherly way to her eyes, and reconducted her visitor into the regions of business.

"Please to take a seat, sir," said Mrs. Chivery. "Miss Dorrit is the matter with our John, sir; he's a breaking his heart for her, and I would wish to take the liberty to ask how it's to be made good to his parents when bust?"

Mrs. Chivery (who was a comfortable looking woman, much respected about Horsemeadow Lane for her feelings and her conversation) uttered this speech with full composure, and immediately afterward began again to shake her head and dry her eyes.

"Sir," said she in continuation, "you are acquainted with the family, and have interested yourself with the family, and are influential with the family. If you can promote views calculated to make two young people happy, let me, for our John's sake, and for both their sakes, implore you so to do."

"I have been so habituated," returned Arthur at a loss, "during the short time I have known her, to consider Little Dorrit as a habituated to consider Miss Dorrit in a light altogether removed from that in which you present her to me, that you quite take me by surprise. Does she know your son?"

"Brought up together, sir," said Mrs. Chivery. "Played together!"

"Does she know your son as her admirer?"

"Oh! bless you, sir," said Mrs. Chivery, with a sort of triumphant shiver, "she never could have seen him on Sunday without knowing that. His came alone would have told it long ago, if nothing else had. Young men like John don't take to ivory hands a pining for nothing. [John had invested some of his earnings in a fancy cane—the feature of which was an ivory hand.] How did I first know myself? Similarly."

"Perhaps Miss Dorrit may not be so ready as you, you see."

"Then she knows it, sir," said Mrs. Chivery, "by word of mouth."

"Are you sure?"

"Sir," said Mrs. Chivery, "sure and certain as in this house I am. I see my son go out with my own eyes when in this house I was, and I see my son come with my own eyes when in this house, and I know he does it." Mrs. Chivery derived a surprising force of emphasis from the foregoing circumstance and repetition.

"May I ask you how he came to fall into the desponding state which causes you so much uneasiness?"

"That," said Mrs. Chivery, "took place on the same day when to this house I see that John with these eyes return. Never was he himself in this house since. Never was like what he has been since, not from the hour when to this house seven years ago me and his father, as tenants by the quarter came!" An effect in the nature of an affidavit was gained for this speech by Mrs. Chivery's peculiar power of construction.

"May I venture to inquire what is his account of the matter?"

"His account!" repeated Mrs. Chivery. "Our John's? No, sir, no; you little know him. To ask him for his account would not be, I think, to make it over pleasant to the next customer that might want a shilling's worth of Cuba, Bengal, and Havana, and pick 'em out himself. He's much too honorable besides."

"May I ask, then, what is your account of it?"

"You may," said Mrs. Chivery, "and I will give it you in honor and in word as true as in this shop I stand. Our John has every one's good wish. He played with her as a child when in that yard a child she played. He has known her ever since. He went out upon the Sunday afternoon when in this, very parlor he had dined, and met her, with appointment or without appointment, which I do not pretend to say. He made his offer to her. Her brother and sister is high in their views, and against our John. Her father is all for himself in his views, and against sharing her with any one. Under which circumstances she has answered, 'Our John, 'No, John, I cannot have you; I cannot have any husband; it is my intention to be always a sacrifice; farewell, find another worthy of you and forget me!' This is the way in which she is doomed to be a constant slave to them that are not worthy that a constant slave she must, teen should be. This is the way in which our John has come to find no pleasure but in taking cold among the linen, and in showing in that yard, as in that yard I have myself shown you, a broken down ruin that goes home to his mother's heart." Here the good woman pointed to the little window, whence her son might be seen sitting disconsolately in the tulleers groves.

High Prices Among the Ancient Mariners.—The following yarn, which was related by an old friend, about the proclivities of ancient mariners in the city of New Bedford to draw on their imaginations, is good:

A dozen old captains were seated round old Uncle Johnny Coggs's grocery store one winter's day. Says old Captain Ben Nash, 'I guess I got more in the West Indies for herring than any other man about this place.'

"How much did you get, Uncle Ben?"

"Well, you see, I was bound to the Windward Islands and a market, and just as I had got all my cargo aboard, I was cypherin' on my log slate how long I should possibly be from home, when I found I should with luck, reach Kill's about Lent. Thinks I, I'll take a barrel of herring on speculation. I had a good passage, and got there just in the nick of time and sold 'em off well."

"How much did you get Uncle Ben?" asked some of the old salts, who, with pencil in hand, were making notes to try and catch Uncle Ben foul; "how much did you get?"

"Well, can't say exactly how much, but I put the money back into the barrel after the herring was out, and I could scarcely crowd the head in."

"What did you get apiece for the herring?"

"Sold 'em for a dollar apiece!"

"Ah, yes. Well now, Uncle Ben, at a dollar a piece for your herring, you could not have half filled the barrel."

"Well," says Uncle Ben, "that's all very true; but I sold the pickle at five dollars a spoonful!"

A hard boy—that same "Ancient Mariner."

A friend of Cuvier once took the horns and hoofs of an ox and approaching the bedside of the great naturalist, awakened him from a sound sleep, and announced as the devil, who had come to eat him. Cuvier rubbed his eyes and glanced at the nondescript from horns to hoof, when he lay down and quietly remarked: Horns, hoofs—grammivorous—eat grass—you can't come it, go away.—Chicago Journal.

The New York Dutchman says that whoever wishes to get along in this world has only to take a few lessons of a hen chasing a grasshopper. With a long neck and sharp eye, take a few hurried steps, stop short, peep over, peep under, now left, now right, one flutter and a rush, and then you have him. That's the way it's done.

A Virginia postmaster has been inquiring of the Department the meaning of the little "pictures stuck on the letters," and another official in Iowa desired the Department to sustain him in a decision he had recently made against a fellow who insisted that "them pictures of Washington on the letters paid the postage."

The following question is now before the Sand Lake Debating Society: "Which do women like the best—to be hugged in a polka or squeezed in a sleigh?" We shall issue the decision in an extra.

Why are the ladies of the present day like the ladies of the Scriptures?

Because they toil not, neither do they spin; yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of them.

An exchange paper quotes Paul's writings: "Owe no man anything," and then adds: "Guess some of our subscribers never read Paul's epistles."
