Department. Farmers'

HOES AND HOEING.

"Where you see a tall corn-house you may look out for a good deal of hoeing, is an axiom with hired men and boys of unimpeachable veracity. A "tall cornhouse" signifies a large corn-field, and corn grows by hoeing and not without .-No farmer whose hoe gets rusty from "planting time" until the "tassel" shoots, has much need of a tall corn-house-any sort of a "corn-crib," will do for his crop. Clean culture and frequent stirring of the soil in the early stages of its growth, are indispensable requisites to large crops of Indian corn. Of other requisites, -thorough preparation and manuring, as well as seasonable plantingwe have already spoken The hoc-hand and horse-must do what remains to be done for the present year, though it is not too late for top-dressing with ashes, plaster, etc., and this should by no means be neglected.

Probably the Indians knew something of the culture of Indian corn. They used hoes, and practised clean and freder blade of a Moose or Deer, or of a large clam shell, fastened to a stick were rather rude implements, but in the hands, of the women furniers of that day they accomplished the work faithfully and well. Our women, thank Heaven, have "laid down the shovel and the hoe;" but it is not a week since one of our German neighbors who was at work for us, brought along wife, mother, and baby, to assist in planting potatoes. Probably the same force will be employed to finish their culture, and assist in their consumpton. But we had only intended to speak of what hoes had been, and what they should be. Within our recollection they have been rude, heavy implements, which it were a day's work to carry, to say nothing of wielding. Now we have little to complain of on that score. _Give us a light hoe set right on a long smooth, springy handle; the edge sharp, too hard to batter and too so's to break, and a little more "backbone," as they say in politics and we will take care of "our row for "a few bouts" at any rate. Horse-hoes, cultivators, and the like. are a great labor-saving invention. With straight rows and a mellow soil, the hand hoe is almost, (but not quite) superseded, and may be handed over to the "the boys" who follow and regulate" the rows after the passage of one of the first usined implements. With a steady and knowing horse, who will "haw" or "gee" at the word and can see corn hills for himself, one can stir the whole surface between the rows, by passing back and forth each way, with proper care. A good horse-hoe will be so arranged as to turn the soil from the hills when the corn first comes up as not to cover them; and to turn it towards them when it gets larger so as to cover up any small weeds which may appear, and to form a slight hill around the plants.—We are not in favor of any amount of hillir g, even though it was the practice of the Indians to pile them two feet high, as well as to manure in the hill with fish, and to use the stalks for bean poles.

There is "a philosophy of hoeing" as well as of plowing or using the harvested crop. "Why do we hoe?" is a pertinent question, to which the answer will be, to mellow the soil and kill the weeds. Half of us, when we "take up the hoe" don't have any definite idea of what we would be at. We scrape away a little of the surface soil around the stalks, and haul up a little mellow dirt to cover the weeds, not to kill them, as we should do Let us strike the hoe well in, each side of the hill, and draw it towards us, so as to stir the soil two inches deep. Do this two or three times each side the hill, and then smooth it off to suit the faucy, and one hoeing will having accomplished both these objects. The horse-hoe ought to have done the rest. But don't let anything drive us from the field, or keep us from it more than one week at a time until the corn and potatoes are large enough to shade the ground and keep the soil mellow and clean for themselves .-Rural New Yorker.

men. A man in Framingham, Mass. has invented a "planting machine.". It is hollow, and of the shape and size of a walking stick. Instead of the old laborious stooping and digging, the farmer has but to fill this with corn, or beans, and take a morning walk back and forth across his field, use his cane briskly as he goes, and presto the work is done !

"Bent to the earth in hard but healthful toil," henceforth becomes a figure of speech. Modern machinery is making sad havoc with the Poets, It turns their descriptions into nonsense. The sower no longer goes out "To broadcast o'er the land.". He gets the work done for him by an iron fingered Drill. There is no longer danger of muzzling "the ox that treadeth out the corn." He has given up his place to the flail, and the flail in turn-has been turned out by a Four-Horse Power Threshing Machine. Gone is the "reaper's sickle," and gone the "ringing scythe." We have only to hitch up a Reaping Machine, to do the work of forty. The "jocund wine press" has lost its jouundity, and become a matter-of-fact Screw. Cowper not long ago sang of wintered stock :-

No tender ewe can break her nightly fast,
No helfer strong begin the cold repast,
Till Giles with ponderous beetle gremost go,
And scattering splinters fly at every blow." Where are Giles and his ponderous beetle now? Turned into a Turnip Cutter., In the "good old time" folks made merry with song and dance at Harvest Home. -Well they might, for most of them had been half starved for six months before. Now there are no more merry makings. Now there are no more merry makings.
