THE GIPSIES

In England there are at most 1500 gipsies in France, they are hardly to be found at all; in Spain the last census put them at 30,000, nearly all dwellers in cities and followers of sedentry trades. Before the end of the present century, they will probably be extinct over Western Europe.

The number of Hungarian gipsies, according to the census of Maria Theresa, is 58,000; in Transylvania, they are reckoned about 17.000: in Wallachia and Moldavia, ten years ago. there were 37,000 families which at five to a family, would give 185,000 souls; so that in the Principalities every eighteenth person is a gipsy. In Southern Russia, their number is probably nearly as great; but no accurate computation can be made, as they lead an entirely wandering life, in summer grazing their cattle on the plains, and in winter encamping in the depths of the forest. Of the gipsies of Hungary and the Principalities, about one fourth have partially settled down in the towns and villages, and live like their Western brethren, by telling fortunes, cheating and pilfering, and ostonsibly as buyers and sellers of horses and mules, menders of kettles, and street-musicians. In the last capacity alone, they touch on any of the higher attributes of humanity. Music is their gift, as with the other wandering race, the Jews; and among the songless Hungarians, every musician is a gipsy.

The first Eastern gipsies I met were at Brunn, in Moravia. It was fair time, and the courtyard of the hotel was crowded with carts, goods, horses and cattle, while their owners shedding that ran round three-fourths of the ed on the country, and tried to smile, but the yard. On a heap of straw in the mi idle, in the full heat of the blazing sun, lay four gipsies asleep. They were all four tall, powerful men, with coal-black hair as course as rope, streaming over faces of African blackness; and as they lay relaxed in sleep, their figures her sar, ever on the watch, caught the sound seemed gigentic. Their dress so to call it was a collection of the vilest rags, strapped round - the waist with a rough Turkish shawl, and each had a large double edged knife at his le' . Their instruments by beside them; for they were musicious; and when the cool of the evening come on, they begun to play Two had violins, one a trumpet, the fourth a Hungarian cymbal, which is something like a guitar, played, not by hand, but with two small sticks covered with skin. Their music and mode of pluying were as wild as themselves. They played only the old Hungarian tunes, those singular melancholy airs, in which the genius of the race and country is reflected, but with a passion and a pathos that passes into the souls of the listeners. Afterwards at Pest's those bands we found at every dance and concert of the middle and lower classes. Their music is always the same, and to a stranger grows somewhat monotonous; but the natives seemed never tired of listening to it. With them it is a point of honor to uphold the old national tunes; and while the gipsies are generally looked upon as hardly pos souls, the gipsy musician if possessed of talent soon rises into consideration, and is often to be met with in respectable society, and even possessed of considerable property.

"A zigeuner was once driving his horse and cart loaded with all his family and goods, agle-deep in mud, down a narrow lane. Slowly and painfully went the wheels aroundslower and slower still-and at last they came to a dead lock. The horse pulled and pulled, the man flogged and flogged, and swore and swore, as only a Jew or a gipsy can flog or swear. It was of no use, the cart was immoveable. One last tremendous cut of the whip; but the poor animal only fell forward on its knees and nose.

It was perhaps the fall of his beast that made him for once look upwards, and turn in his distress to the holy ones; but the Virgin above all. Though he had never prayed before, he now made a shift to pray; that is, he used up all the words he had picked up here and there from Christian men, with a stray imprecation or two intermixed; but that was from habit. "Help! blessed Ladyhelp! and I will give to thy altar a waxen taper as thick as my body." Whether the Vir had heard him or not, the horse had by this time a little space to breathe, and then the whip pgain descended, the cart moved on a few steps. The heathen fancied himself already out of the predicament, when it stuck fast once more. He took to his prayers again; but as half the way was over, and wax expensive, he vowed this time a taper only as thick a his arm. He had no time for amen, but took to his whip more vigorously than ever and the cart, step by step, at last had a prospect of being eventually clear of the mire. To make all sure he repeated his vow; but the ling.

good lady has something else to do than to be looking after a goor devil like me?".

Rascals as the Zigeuners are, and living in the greatest misery and filth-in fact the dirtier their huts the better they like themthey are still a very handsome race, the women especially. The burning sun scorches their faces more, and they are therefore much darker in Hungary than in England; but the free life they lead gives them ar unconstrained and independent bearing, which the constable, the stocks, and the prison have long taken from their island brethren. These bold, brown, beautiful women only make one astonished to think how such eyes teeth and figures can exist in the stifling atmosphere of their tents. But beautiful they are, and their beauty has sometimes led to unions which have almost always resulted in misfortune.

Stefan B., a young and very righ proprietor of the Banat, having lost his way in the chase, had to pass the night in a Gipsy tent. A young and beautiful girl was there, with the dark eyes and seductive smile of her race, and her parents had the true gipsy guile to fun the glowing passion of their guest. He, was wealthy, passionate, an orphan and un... controlled; and within a week the gipsy was his wife, and in a few days more installed in full possession of his beautiful chateau on the banks of the Temes.

Within ten days, in fact, the gitani had reached a fabulous fortune. From the smoke dried tent of her father, she was transported, as if by magic, into a noble domain, surrounded with luxuries, with trains of servants, and a husband devoted to her wishes. Notwithstanding, she was miserable. The fixed and quiet life, the very comforts she enjoyed seemed to press and weigh her down. When her husband questioned her as to the cause were dozing in the shade under a range of of her wan and altered appearance, she looksmile was full of bitterness. Her only comfort seemed to be to sit gazing for hours upon the distant wastes she had so often traversed. bare footed, and rejoicing in the days of her poverty. 'She was seated thus one day, when of a gipsy band. Through the trees, she then a joyous voice struck up the favorite

> The wind is roaring through the wood, The moon is mounting higher, The gipsy hults to cook his food, And lights his forest fire.

Free is the sulmon in the sea, The wild stag on the hill; The eagle in the sky is free, The gipsy freer still-Hurrah! The gipsy freer still!

Young girl wilt in my costle rest. I'll give thee rings of gold, In robes of silk thou shalt be dressed, Thy hair in ducats rolled.

The vulture scarce for golden enge, Her nest on high will quit; The wild horse, free from youth to age, Will spurn at golden bit.

So free to rest or free to roam, Or by the wood-fire laid. The sky her roof the world her home, Will live the gipsy maid-Hurrah! Will live the gipsy maid!

At the last note, the listener suddenly prang through the open casement, and vanished among the trees. When her husband came in, no one had seen her or could give any tidings of her. For two days, he sought her in vain; night closed upon the third, when the light of a distant fire showed a gipsy encampment and his heart told him he was near the object of his search. Stealing through the bushes, he approached upperceived within n few feet of a pair who were seated talking by the fire. It was the singer and his wife, who was telling him of the weary hours in the splendid misery of her chateau.

Stefan B. returned broken-hearted to his house, which he soon after quitted forever. The next year the Hungarian revolution broke out, and he found what he sought, an early grave before Temesvar.

DR. CHEES MAN'S PILLS.

The combination of ingredients in these rills is the result of a long and extensive practice; they are mild in their operation, and certain of restoring nature to its proper channel. In every instance have these rills proved successful. They invariably open those obstructions to which Females are liable, and bring nature futo its proper channel, whereby health is restored and the pale and deathly countenance changed to a healthy one. No female can only good health unless she is regular; and whenever an obstruction takes place, whether from exposure, cold or any other causa, the general health immediately begins to decline, and the want of such a remedy has been the cause of so many consumptions among young females.
