

Farmers' Department.

On Shoeing Horses that Overreach.

I was bred from my youth a blacksmith and farmer, and whether a natural mechanic or not, I was anxious to know the why and wherefore of things, or, more properly speaking, the casualties and preventives. I was also fond of trying experiments upon such things as appeared favorable for improvements. I was generally in the shop with my father in the evenings, rainy days and such other times as could be spared from the farm or school. By being in the shop much, I obtained the view of the farmers generally, and by that was enabled to make many improvements on the farm. I learned also, that many farmers entertain very erroneous views about blacksmiths, too still; they were bound to state according to prejudice; as, for instance, one says—"This horse overreaches, I want you to put the forward hooves as far forward as possible, and set the hind shoes as far back, or he will wear them off." I would sometimes try to reason the case by saying the way to prevent a horse from overreaching, is to augment the speed of the forward feet and retard the motion of the hind ones; but in order to accomplish that, I shall have to reverse your directions. Some who had little or no mechanical genius, would cut short all argument and say: "Follow my directions or else not shoe the horse." Of course a mechanic must obey orders, if he breaks owners; so the horse would go out of the shop, nicely fettered, with his shoes clicking at every step; while, perhaps, the man of inquiry would desire a full explanation. My way is, to make the "toecorks" very low, and standing a little under, and the shoes set as far back as convenient on the forward feet, with high heel-corks, so as to let them roll over as soon as possible. On the hind feet, I have the heel cork low, and toe cork high projecting forward, thus keeping back the hind foot, while coming up over a high toe cork, giving time for the forward foot to get out of the way. If thus shod, the horse will travel clean, without a click, and his speed will be increased on a trot fifteen or twenty seconds in a mile.—New England Farmer.

Keeping Apples for Winter.

Apples are kept through the winter—1. By being laid on the floor in a cool cellar, with a light covering of straw, and air admitted from a north window, until it becomes so cold as to endanger their freezing. 2. By being packed in flour barrels, and headed up, and suffered to remain in open sheds until the severity of winter requires their removal to a cool dry cellar, where they are to be laid in tiers on their sides. In some cases they are packed in hay, with a light stratum of straw, or dry mud, or dust or chaff interposed, so as to keep the apples from touching, and this as far as I have observed, is the best plan. 3. Many farmers make a cave of boards in their yards or gardens, and fill it with apples, covering it over with earth, and admitting the air by means of a stove pipe. In this case, care ought to be taken to prevent the earth from touching the apples, and sufficient drains made around it to carry off the water. This method succeeds well, and apples are thus preserved till late in the spring. A fourth way is to lay the fruit on shelves in the cellar, but it is difficult in most places to keep the rats out, these vermin very often make sad destruction, as I have experienced more than once.—Country Gentleman.

Farm Scrap Books.

Every farmer should keep a scrap-book. We do not mean that he should collect pictures and poems, and other dainty wares, in a splendid folio, but that he should obtain a large and plainly but substantially bound folio of light cartridge-paper or of wrapping-paper, so well let that it can be written on.—Then let him cut, or direct his children to cut, from his county paper, or from the Herald, everything relating to agriculture on which he can lay his hands. To avoid confusion, and for sake of reference, he would do well to devote a portion of the book to each subject, and arrange them alphabetically. Thus, under the letter A may come general remarks on agriculture, apples or any other farming subject beginning with A. An index should be made to facilitate the finding of any article required, and plenty of room left on the margin of each page for the farmer to write down any remarks of his own. Such a volume would in a year or two, become a matter of constant reference, and a source of very decided profit.

CARLISLE FEMALE SEMINARY.—MRS. CLARK, who has been for several years engaged in teaching, respectfully applies to the citizens of Carlisle and vicinity, in the list of Sponsors, to give aid towards the second session, on Louther Street, near the German Reformed Church, of the SEMINARY FOR YOUNG LADIES.
The Institution will be open for boarding and day school, in which all the branches necessary for the complete education of young ladies will be taught. Assistants of the highest character for qualifications and morality will be employed in accordance with the object of the Institution. The general instruction will be conducted in English and French, while sectarianism will be scrupulously excluded.
The principals present themselves that their long and successful experience as teachers, as well as the recommendation of the most distinguished names, will enable them to afford an institution of the highest character for young ladies. They are fully persuaded that such an Institution will be sustained here by the citizens and neighboring country, and hope that their confidence will not be disappointed.
