THE UMBRELLA GIRL.

A STORY OF THE QUAKER CITY.

Isaac T. Hopper, the well known Quaker philanthropist, was emphatically the friend of the friendless, and sedulously devoted his long life to deeds of benevolence.

A young girl, the only daughter of a poor widow, removed from the country to Philadelphia, to earn her living by covering umbrellas.

At a hotel, near the store for which she worked, an English traveller, called Lord Henry Stuart, had taken lodgings.

Lord Henry invited her to visit the public gardens on the Fourth of July. In the simplicity of her heart, she believed all his flattering professions, and considered herself his bride elect.

On the eventful Fourth of July she came out in her dress. Lord Henry complimented her on her elegant appearance; but she was not happy.

The evident sincerity of her words stirred the deep fountain of his better nature. "If you are innocent," said he, "God forbid that I should make you otherwise."

"What could I understand," said she, "except that you intended to make me your wife?"

Though reared amid the proudest distinctions of rank, he felt no inclination to smile. He blushed and was silent. The heartless conventionalities of the world stood rebuked in the presence of affectionate simplicity.

Alas, her wretched forebodings proved too true. The silk was traced to her; she was arrested while on her way to the store and dragged to prison.

The kind hearted friend immediately went to her assistance. He found her lying in the celly with her face buried in her hands, sobbing as if her heart would break.

"Leave us alone," said he to the keeper, perhaps she will speak to me if there is no one to hear.

After a long time spent in affectionate entreaty, she leaned her young head on his friendly shoulder, and sobbed out, "Oh, I wish I was dead; what will my poor mother say when she knows of my disgrace?"

He went immediately to her employer and told him the story. "This is her first offence," said he. "The girl is young, and she is the child of a poor widow."

The kind hearted man next proceeded to the hotel, and with Quaker simplicity of speech inquired for Henry Stuart.

He excused himself by saying that he would not have tampered with the girl if he had known her to be virtuous.

Lord Henry handed him another fifty dollar note and smiled as he said, "you understand your business well."

"Farewell, friend," replied the Quaker, "though much to blame in this affair, thou hast behaved nobly."

Years after these events transpired a lady called at Friend Hopper's house and asked to see him.

When he entered the room he found a handsomely dressed young matron and a blooming boy five or six years old.

When he entered the room he found a handsomely dressed young matron and a blooming boy five or six years old.

When her emotion was somewhat calmed she told him that she had married a highly respectable man, a Senator of his native state.

Being on a visit in Friend Hopper's vicinity, she had again and again passed his dwelling, looking wistfully at the windows to catch a sight of him; but when she attempted to enter her courage failed.

"But I must return home to-morrow," said she, "and I could not go away without once more seeking and thanking him who had saved me from ruin."

"La saque me!" said Mrs. Partington, "if the DIMK O' CRAZY hasn't put up a pole, with some old woman's garter tied to the top, and BROOK-CANE-EM & BUCKING HEADS, pained on it?"

He smiled and thought the old lady's blunder was a happy hit.
