Accumulation of M: nure.

------Permit us to impress upon your mind the importance to your interest, in a pecuniary point-of-view, of collecting all the rough materials on your farm, and either covering your cattle-yards with them or forming them into, compost heaps, In disposing of such materials, whether in the cattle-yard or in the form of comnost heans earn must be taken waden such means as will tend to prevent loss by the escape of the liquid manure of your stock and to arrest the escape of the gascous portions of it. By the form of your cattle-yards, and a judiciously arranged cistern, plaster sprinkled through and on your manure piles you' may prevent the loss of the latter, to a very great extent, The plan we here recommend may, and probably will, be objected upon the score of labor and expense ; but such objection should not prevail, as every dollar judiclously laid out in the accumulation of materials susceptible of being converted into manure from one's farm will not only bring back interest, but compound inter ърь. est, through increase of products and lasting improvement of the soil on which the manure may be applied. It may be laid down as a truth that a farmer's prcfits may be graduated by the quantity of manure he produces on his farm; and U is equally a truth that by well directed energy and industry there are few farms 'on which a sufficient quantity of raw materials might not be collected which, when added to and mixed with the manure of the stock, would go far to fertilize the spring hoe crops. And surely, if such results proceed from the accumula tion of manure, no agriculturist should begrudge the labor or expense it may oust, but, on the contrary, make it a heart duty, as it certainly is his interest, to devous a till measure of the time of his hinds in the collection of such materials as are convertible into manure; for, veri ly, manure is a material part of the capi tal of a farmer.-American Farmer. ----- SUBJECT FOR FARMERS TO STUDY .--Few occupations furnish as fine opportunities for close and careful study as farming. How much light the practical far mer, by observing closely, may throw up on those two subjects-lst. The wants of different plants in reference to, the ele-ments of ru rition. 2d. The wants of plants in reforence" to the physical condition of the soil. The theories of scientific men must be proved true or false by actual trial in the field. Indeed, most of the labors of agricultural chemistry have been directed to accounting for facts discovered by farmers.

DOES FARMING PAY ?---We have for a long time had a "hankering" after one of those "Baronial Farms," out West, say in Illinois, but every now and then an item took us up on things at home. Here is one: "A friend residing twenty miles from the city on a Railroad, delivers to a single hotel in this city, 400 quarts of, milk daily, for which he receives 51 cents per quart the year round. This is but one instance, there are plenty more. If such business does not pay, we should like to hear of a better. Americ n Agriculturust.
