MARL, COAL, &c. The Forethought of Nature.

A long while ago, some laborers in digging a well-near-our Atlantic sea-coast threw out a sort of greenish sand, usixed with bits of sea-shells, which strangely puzzled them. The next year the owner of the farm was surprised to find that wherever his green dirt had been washed by the rains, the vegetation was unusually rich. Such was the first discovery of _marl, a_fertilizer_which-has_already_regenerated whole counties of New Jersey and which, when it comes, into more exhausted fields here in the East to rival the rich bottom lands of the West.

Not less accidental was the discovery of coal. Just when our great cities began to experience a scarcity of wood for fires, just when the astonishing national advances of this century commenced demanding an exhaustless supply of fuel for man ufactures, chance revealed, high up among the stony and barren mountains of Mary-land, Pennsylvania and Virginia, authracite and bituminous coal. At the pres ent day, millions of acres which other-wise would be unproductive; yield up their fossil wood to warm our parlors, cook our dinners, drive our steambonts, propel our locomotives, and turn our cotton

We owe both marl and coal to the provident forethought of nature countless years ago. For marl is but the decayed remains of marine animals, and derives its fertilizing properties chiefly from the lime which forms a principal ingredient of shells. Far back in some remote geological era, untold centuries before man had been created, the waves of a shallow sea washed the localities where we now dig up our marl, depositing there, precisely as the ocean does in similar places now, the shells and dead bodies of tiny marine animals. Year by year, generation by generation, age by age, these deposits went on. At last, some change in the shore, such as the opening or shutting of an inlet, the closing up of a river, or the sudden demudation of a bank, stopped the accumulation; the deposits censed; sand or other soil began to cover them; in time they disappeared from sight; trees began to grow above them; new and strange land animals roved through these woods; man finally came upon the scene. But thousands of years passed, and the red Indian had long given -way. to the white American before these marine deposits were brought to light and used to fertilize our fields as marl .- Nature was patient and could wait. She could foresee and was-content. Before man was created she laid up in her storehouses under-ground the-manure-with which he was to raise, his bread when a dense population and exhausted soils nake corn difficult to get. And so with coal. In another remote geological epoch, also before man trod the earth, vast pine trees covered the globe, growing rankly everywhere as reeds in a jungle. Age by age they germinated, shot upwards, shed their cones, lived out their centuries, died and fell. Age by age others grew in their places, and in turn perished and fell, till they lay piled, one above another, like grass which the mower has cut. Then came a different geological epoch. The pine forcests became swamps, the swamps bogs, the bogs were succeeded by solid earth; and all this while, nature, in her secret the submerged trees into coal. The mighty carboniferous era, which we have described, had for its chief purpose the providing fuel for civilized man. Millions of years before a human being lived upon this globe, nature, aware not only of his coming but of his future needs, made ready for his wants.

We might follow out this thought and furnish other illustrations. We might show how, now that our cedar forests are becoming scarce, rails and shingles are made from primeval trees, dug out of swamps, where the tempests prostrated them thousands of years ago. We might demonstrate that nature, long ages since began to manafacture diamonds, iron ore; gold, a thousand things expressly for man, and is manufacturing them still. But we have said enough. Great and beinficent art thou, oh. nature.

ANOTHER DIVORCE CASE .- Here is a story of the times, a bank and pante incident, that must not be lost :

In the midst of the late excitement and at the moment when everybody thought all the banks were going to the dogs together, Jones rushed into the bank of which, he was a stockholder, and thrusting the certificate into the face of the transfer clerk, he said, in great haste:

"Here, please transfer half that to James P. Smith!"

The clerk looked at it, and asked,
"Which half, Mr. Jones?"
"T don't care, which half," replied

Jones, puzzledat the inquiry. "You had better go to the Courts; I can't make the transfer without a legal decision. If you really wish to transfer your other half to Mr. Smith, we can't do it here."

Jones was confounded. He knew the banks were all in a muddle, but this was too deep for him. He took his certificate from the hand of the smiling clerk, and on looking at it, lo! it. was his marriage certificate! Being a printed form on fine paper, and put away among his private papers, it was the first thing that Mr. Jones laid hands on when he went to his secretary for his bank-stock scrip. He went home, kissed his wife, glad i find she hadn't been transferred to Mr. Smith, and, taking the right papers this time, hastened down town in time to get it all straight.

WOMEN. Some women, at the head of nurseries of manly sons and lovely daughters, lay the world under deep obligations. Some write glorious books, that, beside hair own intrinsic worth, are, to the sex, unrepresented, the shudow of a great rock in a weary land, a tower of defense. Without being seen, the good, great women again and again arrests the meditated degradation, suspends the cruel blow. The increasing band of women who manifest what has been so profoundly hidden, inisunderstood powers of their sex, serve in need their obscure and helpless sisters, like standing army, peacefully stationed between danger and weak-

The undersigned after many years of careful research and experiment, have discovered and perfected a safe, convenient and unceptionable means of completely controlling the maternal function, without employing any of the junutural and delectrons expedients so of ten reserted to for that purpose. Apart from its system uses of preventing conception, it is an infallible means of restoring to health and vigor the abused, deganged and enteeled procreative functions of commerce and of re invigorating and restoring the general health to its wonted constitutional integrity. It consists of a Museume Bear, which encircles the body directly over the os military by the Magnetic action of which the focundating power is intercepted and held in abeyance, and the vital neuro-magnetic currents, otherwise derianced off by sexual excesses are turned back through, the system, stimulating all the viscent to a healthy normal tone. In a true moral aspect, no valid objection can be urged against its lawful use; inasmuch, as it is designed to subserve a great humanifary purpose in the repadactive contony. It is impossible in a brief carding the discovery and the sounce of the action. Accordingly, the prepuletors have prepared a pamphlet, fully ambodying the philosophy of, its influence upon the genities function, its uses, tests and results, which they will floward, upon the receipt of Six courts in postage stamps, to any address.
