The Philosophy of Bread Making. BALTIMORE. C The following remarks on the philoso-phy of broad making are from Johnson's "Chemistry of Common life," a work which-contains-much-useful-and-interes ting information in regard to the food.

"When the grain of wheat is crushed between the stones of the mill, and is then sifted, it is separated into two parts -the bran and the flour. The bran is the outside, harder part of the grain, which does not crush so readily, and when it does crush, darkens the color of the flour. It is therefore generally sifted out by the miller, and is used for feeding horses, pigs, and other animals, or even for applying to land as a manure. If the flour be mixed with a quantity of water sufficient to moisten it thoroughly, the particles cohere and form a smooth, elastic and tenacious dough which admits of being drawn out to some extent, and of being moulded into a variety of forms. If this dough be placed upon a sieve or on a piece of muslin, and worked with the hand under a stream of water, no long as the water passes through milky, there will remain at last upon the sieve a white, sticky substance very much resembling birdlime. This is the substance which gives its tenacity to the dough. - From its glutinous character, it has obtained beverages and narcotics in common use among chemists the name of gluten. When the milk has become clear by standing, a white powder will be found at the bottom of the vessel, which is common wheaten starch. Thus the flour of wheat contains two principal substances, gluten and starch. Of the former, every 100 lbs. of fine English flour contain about 10, and of the latter about 70 lbs. "When a little yeast is added to the flour before or while it is being mixed with water into a dough, and the dough is then placed for an hour or two in a warm atmosphere, it begins to risc-it ferments, that is, swells or increases in bulk. Bubbles of (carbonic adid gas) are disengaged in the interior of the dough which is thereby rendered light and porous. If it be not put into a hot oven, the fermentation and swelling are at first increased by the higher temperature + but when the whole has been heated nearly to the temperature of boiling water, the fermentation is suddenly arrested, and the mass is fixed by the after baking in the form it has then attained. The formation of hard crusts on the loaf may be preven ted by rubbing a little melted lard over it after it is shaped, and before it is set down. to rise, or by baking it in a covered tin. "It is now newly-baked bread, and if it be cut across it will appear light and spongy, being regularly sprinkled over with little cavities, which were pro-duced in the soft dough by the bubbles of gas given off during the fermenta-tion. This fermentation is the consequence of a peculiar action, which yeast exercises upon the moist flour .- It first changes a part of the starch of the flour into sugar, and then converts this sugar into alcohol and carbonic acid, in the same way as it does when it is added to the worts of the brewer or distiller. As the gas cannot escape from the glutinous dough, it collects within it in large bubbles, and makes it swell, till the heat of the oven kills the yeast plant, and cause the fermentation to cease. The alcohol escapes, for the most part, during the baking of the loaf, and is dissipated in the oven. "New-baked bread possesses a peculiar softness and tenacity which is familiar with most people, and though generally considered less digestible, is a favorite, with many. After two or "three days it loses its softness, becomes free and annarently drier.—In commo mbly, language, the bread becomes stale, or it is stale bread. It is generally supposed that this change arises from the bread becoming actually drier by the gradual loss of water: but this is not the case Stale bread contains almost exactly the same proportion of water as new bread after it has become completely cold." The change is merely in the internal ar rangement of the molecules of the bread. A proof of this is, that if we put a stale loaf into a closely covered tin, expose it for half an hour or an hour to heat, not exceeding that of boiling water, and then remove the tin, and allow it to cool, the loaf, when taken out, will be restored in appearance and properties to the state of new bread. "The quantity of water which well-baked wheaten bread contains, amounts on an average to about forty five per cent. The bread we cat, therefore, is nearly half water;-it is, in fact, both meat and drink together.

HORSE TRAINING .- Mr. John S. Raney an American, has recently been creating a sensation in England by his wonderful tact n training horses. Some of the most fractious animals belonging to Queen Victoria and her royal family have been subdued by his management The Union states that Mr. R. will be remembered by many Washingtonians as having exhibi ted his wonderful power over the horse in Washington a few years since. It says it well remembers to have seen him enter the enclosure in front of the old Union office, with a refractory animal, who was completely subdued in a few moments.

A GOOD COW .- Hon. E. P. Buffing ton of Fall River, Mass., owns a cow, i is stated, that has given during the past year 4,704 quarts of milk, which is an average of 13 19 365 quarts per day for the entire year. This milk was sold at six cents per quart, and amounted to $285 84. The original cost of the cow was 874, and the cost of keeping $124 45. making $198 45, while the milk of one year amounted to $87 39 more than both first cost and feed. This is certainly a remarkable cow.

LAYING OUT LANDS FOR WHEAT.-An esteemed Canadian correspondent says that " lands for wheat should run north and south; for if they run east and west the wheat will be the best on the south side of the land-especially if ridged up high-and thinner and of a poorer sample on the north side." Have others.observed this effect?

THE HUNGARIAN GRASS is a variety introluced into Iowa by Governor Ujaz-hy, which seems to be fast becoming an important orop in that State. It is now said to take the place of many other grasses, both for pasture and hay.

THOROUGH DRAINAGE first, deep tillage second, frequent stirring of the sur-face third, are the true means for securing land against the effects of drought. Flat culture of hoed crops is equally indespensable. ٠.
