Wives Wanted.

Our roving fellow-citizens who have found a home on the borders of civilization or beyond, in Kansas, Nebraska, Arizona, &c. are beginning to find out that single blessedness is a very misorable state of existance. And the buchelors of Kansas have advertized for better-halves in such an honest, straightforward and sensible manner, that we give them the benefit of the Democrat's circulation grat nitously. We copy from the Tecumsele

" Wanted Immediately-A 'right smart chance of smart Yankee girls, to become wives of as many men in Kansas Territory Said girls must understand the art of washing, ironing, cooking and making home happy, even should that home prove an unhewed log house, with one room—small at that. It is desirable that they should understand the management children, or they must be, like the Irish girl, easy to teach.

"Salary not very large the first few years; not more than three or four calico gowns and a sun bonnet. But after we get our land paid for, and some fencing and breaking done, we will build for you more pleasant houses, set out fruit trees, build arbors (for the children to play in) set out grape vines, &c. Then we will go down the hill of life together; and we all enjoy our good things all the better for having earned them.

"What say you, girls? Had you not rather become loved and honored helpmates of us sons of toil, than retain the beauty of your white hands and become 'old maids?'

"For further particulars, come and see for yourselves. We shall be found at our claims, keeping each, and if you will give us notice of your coming, we will sweep out and bring in an extra chunk of wood for you to sit on."

A VANKEE OUTWITTED .- A Hoosier correspondent of the Western (Ind.) Herald tells, the following, a good one, how a Yankee notion pedler was taken in by the Spencervilleines, of Spencerville, in that State:

Notions drove into town and commen ced trade, when a merchant stepped up and selected goods to the amount of one dollar, and carried them into the store and returning with a coon skin, said: "Sir, here is the pay for the goods.

"But hold on, " said Notions, " I don' take coon skins for my goods. " "Can't help it now," says the mer chant, "the trade is made, and coon skins is a dollar here-legal tender!"

"Well," said Notions, " if them are your laws here I guess I can stand it.' and at once concocts a plan to get his coor skin into something available. Getting the coon skin into as small a compass ag possible, he makes for a saloon, and there concludes to spend a quarter. Holding one hand under his coat, with the other he beckons up three or four suckers, and after drinking all round, throws down the coon skin and demands seventy five cents

"Yes " says Boniface, "that's a good dollar," and handing him out three muskratskins, says, " Here, sir, is your change. Notions took the change and started.

Scare Crows.

I have tried for years in succession all of the postrums to prevent birds from pulling, worms from eating, and steeps of various kinds to stimulate its growth, and find that tarring the seed makes it distasteful to birds; they will pull and eat but a little; but as to worms eating it, they seem to relish it, equally well. The steeps to stimulate growth, rolling in gypsum, &c., amount to but little. You cannot make lhere to the seed to make any perceptible difference, and unless the soil and season favor, the corn will not come so well as if planted dry. For instance, if you steep the seed, and after planting it is very wet and cold, it will not grow as well, or if it is very dry, it will not come as well: tarring it will retard ils germina tion in any case. For the last five years I have planted the seed dry, recently hand shelled from the cob.

For scarecrows, the best I know of is a few crows shot and hung up by the legs, or bait and catch them in steel traps. In my younger days, these scarcerows were ample to keep off birds. Fvery Yankee farmer should have a good gue and amunition, and know how to use it. Finda'l the crows' nests in your immediate neigh borhood, break up their nests, seize their young, and then is the time to shoot some of the old ones. I once secured sixteen in two hours. Go over your cornfield daily, and if the crows have drawn any, be there the next morning by three o'clock with your artillery, or the crows will be there before you, and salute the first comer with cold lead from your early morning gun and if you do not succeed in bagging him, he and his neighbors will come to the conclusion that they had better leave that man's corn alone. Another way of keep ing crows from your field is by twining. String wool twine from stake to stake once in fifteen rows, directly over the row You can cultivate the first time, and let it remain. Do the twining immediately after planting, and it would be rare to have a crow light on the field while the twine remains.

Crows grow bold by the cry of their young for food, and by man being slack and easy; instinct teaches them whose corn it will do to pull. The fields for which crows have so strong a taste are generally shallow half-ploughed, less than half manured' bordered around by bushes. briers, and weeds, and enclosed by a mere apology for a fence. Years ago one of your peace men had a field with one of those ugly borders which always have a great tendency to widen; at hoeing, none wanted to hoe the outside row; the alter cation between the boys would finally be sattled by the old man saying, "Let the devil take the outside row, and in a few .years he had the whole field.

Should the above mentioned scareerow "fail to keep the crows from pulling the corn, soak other corn in rum or whiskey and strychnine, and scatter broadcast or the field. They, like humans' will like the taste. but as certain as they eat of iton sale, find enough strychnine, without adding more, to do the work for crows H. W. LESTER. Rutland, Vt .- Country Gentleman.
