COLLEGE REMINISCENCES.

ADDRESSED TO A. H. S., BY R. C. KING

Pin sitting in my room, dear Al, And thinking of the rays

Of sunshine, which were wont to gild Our bycone College days. Familiar faces on the wall +

And bless the Fate that placed me in The class of '58.

You'll not forget the times we've seen,

When jokes and hughter went the rounds From hearts so blithe and true; How oft the Dr's, well-known rap

Would quell each agitator, "Why, gonth men, it seems to me

You need a moderator !"

Before me rise the dusky forms Of JUDGE and SAMULL WATTS,

Of Ungle Bill and Shangky Bell, And Broder black in spots. I hear the clanging morning bell,

The shuffling up the stairs, The control improvidens which Ascended with the prayers.

Stole softly in our room, And alphed the mattress to prepare

A morta for his doon;

The effigy was hung, dear At, Full sixty feet in air: The fellows all declared 'twas sport To see it dangling there.

You mind the night when Mount and Jon:

With the gentle undulation of her bosom there rose and fell exactly one hundred and fifty dollars. The sum bore the guise of a bronch of gold and enamel. Her fairy form was invested in ten half engles, represented by a slip of like satin, and this was overlaid by three hundred dollars more in two skirts of white lace. Tastefully down cacli side of the latter were five dollars, which so many hows of purple ribben had come to. The lower margin of the three hundred dollar skirts were edged with eleven additional half engles—the value of some eight yards of silver fringen quarter of a yard in depth. THE OCEAN BURIED.

BY WINNIE WINTHROP.

Of all the burial places in the world, the accan is the largest, and many thousands lie deep, deep down beneath the surface of its waters. There, no eye can look upon the grave of the departed; no sculptured stone, normal ble tablet rehearse his virtues; nor does the foot of man e'er profune the sacred spot with its impress. The flower blooms not there, to indeed a wave dead; neither aloes the friendly willow around dead; neither aloes the friendly willow around.

the fact, that beneath the trackless waters, repose inconscious millions.

A vast cemetery truly, is the great deep!— and one too 'in which no discriminations are made, for the rich and the poor, the ignorant and the learned, widely separated as they may have been in life, rest on the same level, in the same watery abyss. By various chances they have been brought together from different cut-clines no can the numbers ever be estimated, until the sea shall be commanded to to give up its dead.

There upon the ocean's bed sleeps the lamental and devoted Cookman, with his estimated with the destruction of the ill-fated work in oright that his mind was giving way with the machine, his dream having evidently made arr impression upon him-as in delible as any idea ever conceived in his most wakeful hours. Long before he reached his home, he resolved to carry out the spirit of his dream, after breakfist be made them and a the properties of the machine, his dream having evidently made arr impression upon him-as in delible as any idea ever conceived in his most wakeful hours. Long before he reached his home, he resolved to carry out the spirit of his dream, after breakfist be made them each they have been brought together from different contents to work out a model. The obstacles that interposed were legion, but he obstacles that interposed were " Dreams are but children of an idle brain, Begot of nothing but vain fintisy 2. So saith Shakspeare; but what may hold good in some cases does not hold good in all cases otherwise there would, be general rules without exceptions, and that is held by logicans, to be morally jopossible. With mead dream is a dream, and there is an end on that one of the model. He was eminently a practical man, and he made a most thorough that hot so with everybody. There are some men in this world who attach considerable importance to the baseless fabric" of a dream which filts unbidden through the brain; and I believe, as a general thing, it is conceded that the fecuale portion of humanity has an abiding faith in dreams, whether they be of good or evil import. Why this should be so, I am not prepared to sely, and leave the question to those deeper Cersed in buman mature than I am, for a solution what I does not them of the most intelligent haly that I ever was acquainted with, was a firm fellower in the foreshadowing of dreams.

But to my story of a remerkable dream, and if there be truth is the tale of the dreamer—and there is no reason to doubt his word then inject, it was a remarkable dream.

Some years ago, in a little city of the West lived Richard Miller, an honest, industrious, So saith Shakspeare; but what may hold then indeed, it was a remarkable gream.

Some years ago, in a little city of the West lived Richard Miller, an honest, industrious, sober shoemaker. He had emigrated from Philadelphia a few years previous to the open philadelphia a few years previous to the open with his wife and shift and the remaining the time and place—which, of course, the state of the properties of Philadelphia a few years previous to the open-ing of my story, with his wife and child, and by economy and the closest attention to busi-ness, he managed to lay up six hundred dol-lars. This sum he would have undoubtedly so increased as to place himself and family beyond the reach of want in a very tew years. so increased as to place himself and family beyond the reach of want in avery few years had it not been for that insidious monster consumption. The fell destroyer came to him as is usual in such cases, in a bad cold, and for a long time he flattered himself but the should return before night with not less the lief that it was only he bad cold; but like a skilful sapper and miner, it soon undermined his constitution, and he gesoon began to have some faint glimmering of his real condition.

There was no use staying any longer in the

. One day he took it into his, head to consult nn eminent physician -one of the Professors of a medical college- in order to ascertain his true condition. He called upon him and sta

"You can keep yourself alive two years—
probably three—by the moderate use of whis key. It is a dangerous prescription, but in giving it to you I have reason to believe that you will not let it obtain the mastery over you Get the best whiskey you can buy, and drink

I happiest moment in his life. He was just on the pollt of oftering the right of making and vending the machine in the United States to the highest bidder, when an old Yankee tappoll him on the shoulder.

"Young man." said his life. "How as just on Poor Miller-ready-to grasp at the merest shadow of relief, went to a liquor store and purchased a denijohn of Bourbon whiskey, and commenced to take desse of it at intervals secures, I should say she were three dollars and fifty cents on her feet. Thus, altogether, was this thing of light, this creature of loveliness, arrayed from top to toe, exclusive of little sandries, in two thousand eight hundred and twenty five dollars and twenty five bridgeroon, to prevent any of the unreaded and present and future with a feeling of oblivious-ness that was quite a relief to his melancholy proodings over his misery when he was prop-rly himself. When in this state. Miller loved solitude, and its impress. The flower blooms not there, to check as sweet spectures of each thickness of the start weeking branches around to ward off approaching evil; nor gentle Philomela warble her, nocturnal culogiums smid its boughs.

No sighing friend can weave the garland of affection to entwine around the mound which contains the object so dear, for the dark bosom of old bean quite conceals it from view, and the rude sea weed alone can adorn it. There the monster of the deep watches, while the wild sea-bird monns a library address while the wild sea-bird monns a library direct and these are the only honors for the ocean buried for the proud waves defy the skill of man to creet endearing mementoes.

The heavy freighted vessels, specimens of man's artistic genius, daily plough the majeshame was quite light, and he hastened to man's artistic genius, daily plough the majeshame was claimed and the principles of a machine that would in a great measure supercede all hand labor. Every wheel, cog, and casting passed through his brain, and in his dream he even saw the machine in practical operation. When The heavy freighted vessels, spectmens of saw the machine in practical operation. To over many's artistic genius, daily plough the majes. The awoke it was quite light, and he hastened toward his home. His mind was, entirely tathe fact, that beneath the trackless waters, required toward his home. The machine, his dream having pose inconscious millions.

There inpose the occasion of the illificated middle coordinators, whose largistic energy regard to be wrapped up in one great, object.

In the ice binding losses of the selection of the illificated president. In the ice binding losses of the selection of the illificated by the compose the vast family of the ocean buried. Some by accident, and others who being of the blue Atlantic, while thousands beside compose the vast family of the ocean buried. Some by accident, and others who being of the number, that go down to som is ship, that do business in great waters, have fallen victims to death, and have been consigned to the boundless limits of a watery tumb. There they will rest in quiet repose until the archangel's trump shall call them from their drear abodes to meet the nations of curth at the tribumal of the bast day. Till then let thom sleep undisturbed. We would not break their peaceful slumber, but we envyring their occases expulsive to be buried and, are places calculated to excite feelings of deepest interest, and though the grave itself be a subject of pleasant flought, yet what mind can think of the voaring sea without exchanging:

There was no use staying any longer in the cline shop, and had his invention taken to the forry-boat, and it safely landed, but up, ready to operate at the appointed hour —He knew nothing of the advertisement in the papers, ly to weak to work; he spent his days in that inactive, but petulant state so common to consumptives the yard. He did not like it, for in case of failure the mortification would only be the greater; but he consoled himself with the belief that in case of success competition might spring up and enable him to realize one thousand tollars for his right, instead of five hundred dollars, at which moderate figure he habit it.

not come directly from his mistress, and in sixte on an interview. It took place, but in the presence of the mother, a woman whom public report represented as master of her husband and whole family, and indebted for this influence to witcheraft, though for no other reason that can be descenced beyond her uncommon talents and force of character. It may be readily be supposed that even the resources of love would be of but poor avail against the skill and resolution of such a person. When, Rutherford was introduced, he found her ready to meet his, arguments with what was an manswerable defence, a text of Scripture, (Numbers xxx, 2, 3, 4, 5), clearly absolving woman from a bond entered into in her youth, if her father disallowed the fulfilment of it, and promising that in such cases "the Lord shall forgive her." The poor girl horself sat mute and overwhelmed, while the lover vainly pleaded against the application of this text; and the scene ended with her lover vainly pleaded against the application of this text; and the scene ended with her of this text; and the scene ented with her surrender of her portion of the broken coin, and his flying distracted from her house, after telling her she would be a world's wonder for what she had done, and was yet to do.

The union with young Baldoon went on, but entirely under the management of her mother for it is inconceivable that the young man could have pressed his suit if he had known the extent to which the bridge week.

the extent to which the bride was under conthe extent to which the bride was under constraint. The wedding was celebrated as was customary in those days, in the presence of the relatives of both parties, and with great festivity, but the bride remained like one lost in a revery, and who only moves and acts mechanically. A younger brother lived long enough to state to a lady who communicated it to Sir Walter Scott, that he had the duty of carrying her on horseback behind him to church, and he remembered that the hand with which she clasped his waits was "cold and" which she clasped his waist was "cold and damp as marble." Full of his now dress, and the part he acted in the procession, the circumstance, which he long afterwards remembered with bitter sorrow and compunction, made no impression on him at the time.

In the evening the newly wedded party retired to their chamber, while the merry-making

It was evident that she was insanc, and the general belief was way to Philadelphia; and, in crossing the river. Richard Miller paid the last six-peng he had in the world for ferringe.—Once arrived in the city, they went directly to the office of a lawyer, where the necessary papers making a full assignment were drawn up. Miller all the while doubting the possibility of the man having anything like the amount of money he offered; but he still resolved in his mind that he was safe if he got but a single thousand in eash, and the balance in worthless promissary notes: At length the assignment was finished and signal and the man handed Miller a check, payable at one of the principal banks, for the entire anionat, on the back of which the atternative, but yourd Rutherford, who, tarries certified to Miller being the owner of the check.

The patentee was still incredulous; but, satisfied that if the check was worthless, it would be evidence of fraud, and the sale not valid, the papers were exchanged, and he left the office. He hastened to the bank and presented his check to, the paying teller. That gentleman scrutifized it a moment, and then asked him how he would have it?

Richard Miller was again non-plussed.—He stood Jiko a statue, gazing upon the teller un-hen from him and harled through the house by spicits.

David Dunbar is described in an elegy by Mr. Andrew Simpson as a most respectable country gentleman, an agricultural improver, and yet of studius habits. He died by a fall-

A bag with that angount in mixed coin was soon placed before him, and forty-nine packages of one thousand dollars each were laid upon the counter, Miller had by this time in a measure regained his self possession, and after stuffing the notes into his pocket, he shouldered his bag of coin, and left the bank. As soon as he saw an omnibus he bailed it and rode to within two squares of his home, when his reached the latter, he staggered in beneath his load, and walking directly to the bot, he empirical the bag of glittering coin up, on it or the infinite anagedient of his wife. In this way he raved, shouted, and scupped. Large beads of perspiration stood upon his brow, his face looked haggard, and his eye had the wild glare of a maniac.—In vain his wife trial to only his agitation, he raved upon head the wild glare of a maniac.—In vain his new and a strange home, with a husband tired new and a strange home, with a husband tired by business, cares that never intraded upon the old hours of honeyed courtship, and among neighbors who are strangers to the companinespanois who are strangers to the compan-ions, and perhaps to the associations, and re-finements of her youth. The habit of invidious comparison is the fatal bane of American families; and when the wife's envyings happen to cross the husband's ambition, and her social vanity refusing to enter into his business schemings, claims for ostentation the time and substance he needs to cope with some rival's grasping competistic open with some rival's grasping competision, who comes to the household and the good angel veils his face and is ready to depart; but let the wife, who should know him best, keep the heavenly guest, and if lonely self-THE BRIDE OF BALDOON.

The story of the bride of Baldoon has been related with all the goace of fiction in the Bride of Lammermoor," by Sir Walter Sett and it has been set to exquisite music by Donizetti, in the popular opera of "Lucia di Lammermoor," but the story in its actual circumstances, is peculiarly interesting and deeply impressive.

She was the Honorable Janet Dalrymphe, idaughter of thefirst Lord Stuir, so distinguished as a lawyer and the part he took in the politics of the day. While still in girlish years the younglady contracted a passionate attachment to Lord Rutherford, Earl of Teviot. The young nobleman returned this affection, and the pair plighted their troth in the usual manner, by parting a coin between them, and inspectating dismal evils upon whoever should withdraw from or violate the compact. But this alliance did not suit the views of the parents—whether from deficient fortone in the young lord, or from contracions politics, does not appear. They favored a new suitor, who appeared in the person of David Dunhar, younger, of Bal-loon in Wigtownshire. On learning that Dunhar was andwancing-in his suit. Lord Rutherford wrote to his mistress to remind her of her engagement, but received an answer form her mother to the effect that she was now ensible of the error she had committed in entering into an engagement unsanctioned by the paternal authouity, and this engagement it was not her intention to fulfil. The lover refused to take an answer which he did not come directly from his mistress, and in sisted on an interview. A GEM FROM AN OLD BODK.—It has been cloquently and truly said, that if Christianity were compelled to flee from the mansions of the great, the academies of philosophers, the hall of legislators, or the throngs of busy men we should find her last retreat with woman at the figuility. Her last retreat with woman at the fiveside. Her last audience would be the children gathering around the knees of a moth-er—rite last sacrifice; the prayer; escaping in silence from her lips, and heard, porhaps, only at the thrown of God. But suddenly there was heard to proceed from the bridal chamber a loud and pieroing ory, followed by dismal groans. On its being opened the alarmed company found the bridegroom weltering in his blood on the threshold, and the bride cowering in a corner of the chimbre, with no covering but here shift, and that
