CHAPTER 1.

The time at which we open our story is mid winter, and towards the close of the seventeenth century. Russin is the scene.

In the suburbs of Moscow, and very near the river Moskwai Mod an humble cot, which betrayed a neatness of arrangement and show of taste that more than made up for its small ness of size. Buck of the cet was untriness of size. Buck of the cot was an arti-san's shop, and other out-buildings. This shop was devated to the manufacture of firearms, mostly. Somo swords, and other edged weapons, were made here upon special appli

The master of this tenement was the hero of our tale, Ruric Nevel We find him standing by his forge, watching the white smoke carled up towards the throat of the chimney. He was a young man, not over three-and-twenty, and possessed a frame of more than ordinary symetry and muscular development. He was not large—not above a medium size—but a single glance at the awelling chest, the broad shoulders, and the sinewy ridges of the bare arms, told at once that he was master of great physical power. His father had been killed in the then late war with the Turks, and the son, leaving his mother with a sufficiency of sustenance, went to Spain soon after the bereavement.— There he found work in the most noted armories; and now, well versed in the trade, he had returned to his native city to follow his calling, and support his mother.

Near by stood a boys-Paul Peepoff—abright, intelligent lad, some fifteen years of age, who had bound himself to the gunmaker for the purpose of learning the art.

Claudia Nevel, Ruric's mother, was a noble looking woman, and the light of her still handsome countenance was never brighter than when gazing upon her boy. She had a thankful, loving heart, and a prayerful, hopeful soul.

"It is snowing again, faster than ever," remarked Paul, as he took his seat at the supper-table, in company with the others.

"Ah;" returned Ruric, resting his knife-afew moments while he bent his car to listen twould snow no more for the present. The snow is deep enough now. And how it blows!' "Never mind," spoke the dame, in a trustful, easy tone, it must storm when it listeth, and we can only thank God that we have shelter, and pray for those who have none.'

"Amen!" responded Ruric, fervontly. The meal was at length eaten, and the table set back, and shortly afterwards Paul retired to his bed. ...

Rurie drew his chair close up to the fire place, and leaning against the jum he bowed his head in absorbing thought. This had become a habit with him of late. His mother having observed these fits of abstraction, became uneasy and pressed Ruric to tell her what it was over which he was so constantly and so moodily brooding. Being thus urged, Ruric confessed that it was of Rosalind Valdai (the orphan daughter of a nobleman, and now the ward of Olga, the powerful and haughty Duke of Tula) he was thinking.— Ruric's father and the father of Rosalind, had been comrades in arms in their youth, and their children had been playmates. But when the elder Nevel was slain in battle, Ruric was yet a boy, and the widow and her son remained poor and obscure: while Valdai more fortunate, had risen to a high rank, and dying, left Rosalind a title and a fortune. The young people, however, had not forgot in each other. Ruric loved Rosalind with ten each other. Ruric loved Rosalind with all the fervor of his being, and he felt assured that Rosalind returned his love. As he and his mother sat debating the matter on that stormy night, a loud knock upon the outer stormy night, a loud knock upon door stanted them, if Is there any one here?" the gunmaker asked, as he opened the door, howing his head and shielding his eyes from the driving "Yes," returned a voice from the Stygian arkness. "In God's name let me in, or I darkness.

"They out found the thickly-gloved hand —gloved with the softest fur—and having led the invisible applicant into the hall he closed the door, and then led the way to the kitchen. Without speaking, Ruric turned and gazed upon the new comer. The stranger, who was equally desirous of ascertaining white manner of man Rurie vers, was a monk—and habited something like sone of the Black manks of St. Michael. He was of medium height, and possessed a rotundity of person which was comical to behold. At length, after warning himself by the fire, the guest asked if he could be accommodated with some sleeping place, and being answered in the affirmative, Ruric showed him to a chamber and then retired himself. The next morning, after breakfast, the Monk went with Rurie to his shop, and examined with much interest the various were pous therein. Rurie questioned him closely as to whether he had ever met him before but the Monk replied evasively, and after saying that in case the gunmaker should ev er, in any great emergency, need a friend, that he might apply to him, he took his

OES DISEASE ORIGINATE IN IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD?

This is a question of vital importance, and one which has use a been satisfactorily disposed of by the professors who teach the healing, art. Some maintain—and especially the old school illustrates that like lives in the blood, and therefore all liseases orientate Tiblical modern schools are were that alments have their origination is bach the solids and fluids of the lody. That the latter preponderate, however, is a fixed fact, and medical skill has clearly, demonstrated that at least two thirds of the lift that human feelies heir to, have their source in an IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD

IMPURE STATE OF THE BLOOD IS—
As, for instance, in the long ratalogue, such as, Serofuls, Tetter, Barlier's tich, 'Pimples, Blotches, Frysipe isa, Ujeris, Salt Rheum, discharges from the Enr., Pever.
