THE CANARY BIRDS REQUEST.

Will you take me to your bower dear lady, Where roses of happiness bloom - I can bask in the sunshine of pleasure But grow sad in the shadow of gloom.

I have learned a new song dear lady. Which I'll sing when you're happy and gay,
'Tis composed of wild warblings of fancy And keeps time with my heart in its play.

For I'll warble a more pensivelay, If ever the hours loose their fleetu

Thur ake me to your brown Just lady, Where roses of happiness ble I'll prove a bright sunbeam of pleasure And dispel the approaches of gloom.

Come then, good Mr. Editor, with all your host of readers leave your hot dusty streets, and come out to Carliels Springs; where you may roan over the green hills, gather the sweet wild flowers, and drink in draughts of health and happiness, catching glimpses of health and happiness, catching glimpses of beauty that shudow forth the pleasures of licaven.

"But did I tell you what a time I had with my little Joe?"

"Why, I was showing him the picture of the martyrs thrown to the lions, and was talking very solemuly to him, trying to make him feel what a terrible thing it was. "Mal" said he all at once, "O, mal just look at that poor little lion way behind there—he can't get nay."

FAMILIAR LETTERS TO [L. S.

As we started in the car from Chippewa to the Cliffon House I said to Mrs B, "you must keep a lookout to your right, for you will soon see the Rapids. I had soarpoly uttered the words when the bright sea green and dazzling foam of the rapids. We've seen through the forest trees down the bank and then in a justice of the control of the results of the said then in a justice of the said then in a justice of the said then in an instant after, that most awfully ublime point of the greater a act was seen — I mean the furthest in—point of recession on

I mean the furthest in—point of recession on the Canadian side, where the vast body of deep green water, drops, seemingly slow and sublime, into an abyss, whose extent on the one hand is hidden by intervening trees, and on the other by the verge of the under-water, while its depth the imagination may conceive infinite! There are other points that are grand, sublime, awful, but none with such an impress of the limitless as this one. You ought to have seen the expression of two eyes at my side just then—in them was written not only the fulfillment of the dreams of many a year, but wonder, awe, admiratign and sur-

a year, but wonder, awe, admiritian and sur-prise attempted to be expressed in words that died frembling on her lips

We made the Cliffon House our Niagara Home—whence the most poetically sublime view of the wild waters is seen. To linger there day after day with the uncensing roar of the thunder of the waters -ull'around and within you - the house shaking—windows and doors rattling—the floors beneath your feet with an irregular trenulousness—it is no easy thing to curb the imagination and even bring it down to the wild and gigantic restites. No 'tis not fancy, the very air quivers, and the stars of the eternal heavens trejable in their places, and the dreadful thunder still rolls on! The billows of the ocean sometimes cease, but these never! O Ningara! cease, but these never! O Ningara!

Such as Creation's dawn behold, thou rollest now." Probably you all have often read the story of the first white nan who saw Ningara—180 years ago - how the old Iroquois guide was taking Father Hennepin through the wilderness - a still morning—the roar of waters growing louder clouds of mist seen to rise over the thick forest, the old Indian guide cliuded a tall and swaving since was a bic plinted a tall and swaying pine, waved his band aboft and exclaimed "Niagara!" or "The Thunder Water." And then they de-seemed the steep bank and stood upon "Table and tree, one early morning, and was drenched with the mist as with a heavy shower of rain. I did not, however, venture much on Table Rock, or any other place, just to say I had been there - I could not dure to be so reckless. The last time a large fragment of Table Rock, fell, a carriage was standing upon it from which the horses had just been taken. The which the horses had just been taken. The rock had been thronged all day and all the preceding days, but now a kind of calm pervaded a man went for the purpose of brushing out the carriage when he saw a seam opening between the main land and carriage, and had just time to save himself, when carriage and rock went down into the "yeast of waves," that received the huge and thunderous mass as if it were a pebble in a pond, or as a new plaything, over which to rol its form and hugh, and dance. And Table Rock has a large of crhanging mass unfallen yet; tomin and mugh, and dance. And Table Rock has a large o'erhanging mass unfallen yet; but ready—apparently ready at any time, to fall as any that has preceded, perhaps more, for a long, ugly seam haf a foot in width, deep and running angular across the whole hanging rock, seems prepared to gap suddenly to the curth's centre; and still visitors will contain upon it though its appared to the may spring and they go tottering and wheeling, as if they were the merest pigmies, to a destruction as annihilating, as if they were chaff driven by the wind into a stormy sea! The morning daws gloriously exerywhere

— but the marning at Ningara! let me not at-tempt to describe its impress upon the spirit —it comes; as it comes everywhere, with joy-ous sunlight and clouds of beauty, and songs

STEAMSHIP, WILLIAM JENKINS,
AUGUST 2d, 1859.

MR EDITOR:—My last was written amid the sweet shade of Mt Vernon, and now, I am tossing upon the "high seas."

On Saturday last, at 3 o'clock, P Mi, at a given signal, a little steam tug some olistance from our noble steamship, began to puff and blow, and we found ourselves moving. After tugging away for fifteen minutes, our vessel was brought to a proper position in the water when her vast, machinery was put in motion, and in gallant style, amid the cheering of friends ashore, she left the wharf at Bultimore oity.

I felt anxious to get sight of the Captain, who was to have charge of the living cargo, that surrounded me, and, in a few moments some one remarked, as a splendid looking gen them along the ropes were snapped as if they had been silken threads on the Captain?" of the principle officer of the snip, than I test in my heart the I would be willing to cross the ocean a hundred times with such a looking man; for if men are born poets Caprain Hallet, was born for a sea-Caprain. Before I heard him after a word, the kindest feelings were inspired within my heart towards him. And now, after an acquaintance of nearly three days, and a careful observation of his movements, I can say that I have my doubts whether a nobler spirit ever planted-his foot upon the deck of a steamer. As we passed down the Chesapeake Bay, the scenery of the western shore of Maryland was specially attractive. About 63 o'clock, the towering dome of the State House, at Anapo IIs, was distinctly visible, as its beautiful proportions rested apparently against the sky. This cupola, by the way is said to be one of the best proportioned of any in the Union. It processes pecultar interest to every "American heart as it rises above the spot occupied by Gen. Washington, Dec. 23:1, 1783, when he resigned his commission to Congress, in the pressure of a distinguished assembly.

And the pretty white hand was laid waiting for employment," said the undisconcerted widow (she was very much like widow Wadman at that moment, showing hereye to Uncle Toby.) As O'More had retreated, she had proportionably advanced, and now she was quite near, looking up in his face with a sort of mock innocent holdness. "Why should you seek? why should you writ?" And the pretty white hand was laid affectionately on his arm, How he longed to sliake it off! how he longed to to sliake it off! how he longed to the was actually in a corner.

The widow's soft eyes looked softer; a veil of tears came over them; the tears overflowed; they ran down her rosy cheeks pink and soft as over ripe peaches. "Take what Providence sends you." she sighed, "hy-fortune is anfettered; be its absolute master; purchase or yourself a good-living, in a situation where your talents may be known and appreciated, and in return give me your esteem, your friendship, your—Ah, you must have seen, you must have known—!" and sobs stopped the lady's voice. During our voyage, quite a number of objects of interests attracted attention—among them Long Island the light ship, "sow and pigs." Gay Head, Martha's Vineyard, Holmes Hole, the light Boat, at Minou's Ledge which takes the place of the Light House which was bitten and the light boats, and sold passential to anything a man understakes, either mental or physical. It brings here of wood trace persons. A good part of to day we have been in a thick fog, and the fog bells from the light boats, have been tolling around us, responding to the whistle of our, steamer. At intervals the fog would measurably pass away. During one of these, a whale of large size came in sight, whose presence created quite a sensation among the passengers.

We are now, 6 o'clock P. M. passing into Boston Harbor. The fog has gons, and from verse.—Boston English think, they are requite as fertile generally as their storm, are quite as fertile generally as their storm, and served in the viction of the vent with a morbid sentimentality which grows by what it feeds on, and its fed as frequently as a pet spaniel.
