BY MRS SOUTHWORTH.

It was early on the morning of a lovely day in June, A. D. 1800, that a rather large group of idlers gathered in front of the Etheridge Arms, a quaint old tavern in the ancient little town of Swinburne, in the west of England.

By their looks and conversation, it was evident that some event of unusual importance was expected to come off.

They were, in fact, awaiting the arrival of the mail coach, which was to bring down Colonel Hastings, and his son Albert, who was the bridgeroom elect of Lady Etheridge, Baroness of Swinburne, the last of her race, and sole loire s of the immense wealth and vast estates of her lordly ancestors.

The nuptials were to be celebrated on the fol-The nuplials were to be celebrated on the 101-liwing day; and the retainers and neighbors of the noble bride, who almost worshipped her for her goodness of heart, were anxious to see the man who was to be their beloved "ludy's". husband.

They had not long to wait. The coach soon

They had not long to wait. The coach soon came thundering up to the door; and as soon as the steps were let down by the obsequious landlord. Colonel Hastings issued forth. He was an elderly gentleman, tall, spare, and attooping; was clothed in a suit of clerical block; and his pale, thin, long face was surrounded by hair and whiskers prematurely gray. He was closely attended by his secretary—Ferdinand Cassinove—an Italian, of such graceful mien and dignified bearing, that he might have been taken for a prince of the blood attended by an old gentleman in waiting. he might have been taken for a prince of the blood attended by an old gentleman in waiting. Noxi came forth a young gentleman, whose handsome person and haughty manners at once attracted general attention. His form was tall and finely proportioned, crowned by a haughty head and face, with high, aquiling features, fair and fresh complexion light blue cycs, and very light flaxen hair. His expression of countenance, in keeping with his whole manner, was stern almost to repellant severity. Great beauty of person, with great ser rity. Great beauty of person, with great diguity of manner, forms a combination very attractive to most young women, and per-langs it was this that fascinated the young haps it was this that fascinated the young heiress of Swinburne Castle, for this was Albert Hastings, the bridgeroom elect. He was followed into the house by his valet, busing his dressing-case.

After a slight repast, Col. Hastings, attended by Cassinove, drove off to the castle, to have a preliminary interview with Lady Etherrige, (who was his ward,) and arrange the progresser settlements. On arriving at the eridge. (who was his ward.) and arrange the mariage settlements. On arriving at the lordly castle, Cassinove was shown into a sit-ting-room, while the Colonel proceeded to the library, whither his ward was requested to come

As the young Italian paced up and down; the room, occasionally pausing before a full length mirror, which reflected the spacious window (reaching from ceiling to floor) and the picturesque landscape beyond, suddenly, among the roses outside, glided a purple draped female figure, that immediately rivetted his attention. It was a woman in the entiest bloom of youth. As young Cassingove paged upon her reflected images as he novo gazed upon her reflected imageras he never gazed upon her, he felt as though a goddess had suddenly descended among the flowers. Her form was above the inedium height and well rounded. Her head was finel and well rounded. Her-head was necy formed, and covered with a profusion of jet black, glittering hair, that was plainly parted over her broad, expansive forehead, and went around the temples, and wound into a rich and massive knot at the back of the head. rich and mas-we knot at thebase of the head. Her eyes werelarge, luminous dark grey orbs, that seemed, whenever the long veil of lashes was lifted, to throw a light wherever they glanced. Her nose was straight and well formed, her lips rounded, and like all the rest, full of character. In the carriage of her head and neck, and in her stately footsteps, there was a certain natural majesty that, even in a present, dress would have proved.

even in a pensant's dress, would have proved her one of nature's queens. The impression made upon the enthusinstic heart of Ferdinapd Cassinove was at once heart of Ferdinand Cassinove was at once vivid, deep and strong—quick as a sun-pain-ting, permanent as sculpture. He saw this goddess of the intellectual brow and stately step, open the window and advance, into the roun, and as she approached him he felt his whole frame thrill with a strange emotion of blended pain and delight. He dreaded to move, yet, as the needle turns to the magnet, he felt himself turning from the reflected imhe felt himself turning from the reflected im-nge to face the original. He stood before that queenly form, and met those large, lumi-nous dark eyes fixed upon him in royal graciousness, as she said-

"You are Colonel-Hasting's secretary, 1 "You are Cotone: Hastings secretary, I believe, sir. Pray sit down. You will find the London papers on that table." And, with a graceful bow the fady passed him, and scated herself on a sofa at the extremity of the room, took up a portfolio, and was soon deeply engaged, with its contents.

returned her courtesy, Ferdinand Cassinove remained motionless where she had left him But ten minutes had elapsed since she had glided in among the flowers, and passed him like a vision seen in some beautiful dream.— But ten minutes, and life, the world, himself, were all changed for Ferdinand Cassinove.— He felt that from that moment, his fale must take its character for good or evil, from the will of

In the midst of the pleasing pain of his dream, the door opened, and a grey-haired servant entered softly, and stepping across the room to where the lady sat, and speaking in the low, subdued tone in which royal personages are addressed, said—

"My lady, Colonel Hastings' respects, and he awaits your ladyship in the library."
"Very well, Williams; go and gay to Col. Hastings that I will attend him immediately," answered the lady, rising.
This queenly woman, then, was Laura, Baroness Etheridge, of Swinburne! Forever and forever unattainable by him! Oh, despair! His castle in the fir all tumbled about him, and buried all his hones and assiabout him, and buried all his hopes and aspirations in its fall.

rations in its fall.

After greeting Col. Hastings, on her entering the library, Lady Etheridge took a parchment from a drawer in the centre-table, and handed it to her guardian. On examining the document, the Colonel found it to be a deed of gift, absolute, of her magnificent estate, to Albert Hastings, her intended husband. The Colonel pretended much surprise, and refused to accept the deed, alleging that such in act might give rise to unpleasant criticism;

"Oh, Colonel Hastings! there can be no, question of mine and thine between me and Albort: "The deed of gift that transfers all a y possessions to my future husband is made out: let it be executed. He shall then never be jealous of his wife's riches, for she will come to him as poor as a cottage girl," ex-claimed Lady Etheridge, with a pure devotion of love flushing her cheek and lighting her

After protesting somewhat farther against such noble generosity, the Colonel allowed himself to be persuaded to accept the deed, and called in Cassinove to witness its execution in due form. The poor secretary could scarclely hold the pen, which the Colonel hanscarclely hold the pen, which the Colonel han-ded him, so great was his agitation. His em-ployer could not help remarking upon the unusually poor signature wich the Italian af-fixed, as witness to the deed; but little the co-lonet or the baroness knew the terrible passions that were settling in the secretary's soul, or the important results they were destined to bring about.

man; and doubtless an unusual number of good gifts have been showered upon me by the favor of the blind goddess—not the least the favor of the blind goddess—not the least among them would be esteemed the hand of this wealthy young baroness, my bride expectant. Well, we cannot have everything we want in this world, else tweet Rosa Elmer only should be the wife of Albert Hastings. Poor girll she little dreams that the man who has would her under the name of William Lovel, is really Albert Hastings, the envised bridegroom of the high born Lady Etheridge of Swinburne. It cannot be helped; It cannot pause for lady's right, or maiden's honor. Here, then, for a divided life; my hand to the lady of Swinburne—my, heart to the lovely cottage girl; only Lady Etheridge must never know of Rose Elmer and William Lovel, nor must Rose Elmer know Lady Etheridge and Albert Hastings. And now to persuade Rose to go before me into Wales, where myself and my lady's bride are to spend our honeymoon." And so saying, he took his hat, and strolled | idge's nurse! I never knew that before!" in

And so saying, he took his hat, and strolled out into the street.

Taking a course opposite to that which led to Swinburn Castle, Albert Hasings soon came to a cross-country road, which he followed for some two miles, and then turning into a by path, he wend on until he came to a secluded and lovely cottage. Opening the door of this elegant retreat with a latich key, he passed in It was a lovely abode, at for the home of a fairy. And for a fairy Albert Hastings had had it furnished. The fairy's name was Rose Elmer, and she was the daughter of the village hundress. Albert had accidentally mether on one of his visits to the constle, and, as his soliloquy, given above, shows, had fallen desperately in love with her; and, under the assumed name of William Lovell, had won the beautiful and innocent mailen's heart. eautiful and innocent maiden's heart.

He had had the cottage furnished, and was that morning to meet Rose there, where they had so often met by appointment. Rose came at last; and as soon as the first joyous greetings were over, the intriguing lover set at work to persuade her to consent to a seired marriage; as he well knew, by a thousand tests of character, that he could never gain-his purpose unless Rose believed herself to be his wife. His task was a hard one; but he finally succeeded, by promising that she should stay with her mother just the same, as long as she lived.

This was not at all that Mr. Hastings wished, clergyman, was to be in attendance to perform the marriage ceremony. After which, Rose should return to her mother, to remain during the few weeks of his absence in Wales, whithe he said, important business forced him. This agreed upon, they took leave of each other for a few hours, and returned to the village by different routes. Mr. Hastings went to his inn, and summoned his confidential servant to his presence. And Rose Elmer, full of hope and joy, turned down the street leading to her mother's cottage.

When Rose entered the house, there was smouthering fire in the greate and heads.

When Rose entered the house, there was a smouldering fire in the grate, and beside this fire, in an old arm chair, sat a female, whom no one would have passed without a second look. She was a woman of commanding presence. Her form was tall, and must once have been finely rounded; but now it was worn thin almost to skeleton meagreness. Her features were nobly chiselled and might once have been grandly beautiful, but now they were sunken and beautiful, but now they were sunken and emaciated as those of death. Under her broad and prominent forehead, and heavy black eye-brows, shown a pair of large, dark gray eyes, that burned fiercely with the fires of fever or of frenzy. Her jet black hair, slightly, strenked with silver, was half cov-ered with a red handkerchief, tied beneath her chin, and partly fallen in elf locks down one side of her face. A rusty black gown and shawl completed her dress. As the door opened, admitting Rose, she turned quickly in her chair, fixing her eyes

"Ah, I know you well, and I know what I say," repeated the woman, solemuly.

"Mother! oh, why do you talk so wildly?

This was not at all that Mr. Hastings wished, the continuation of the story but neither logic nor eloquence could convince or persuade Rose Elmer to desert her ailing mother; and upon no other condition that that of being allowed to remain with her would she consent to the secret marriage.

And finally he obtained a promise from Rose that she would meet him at the cottage that same night, where, by a previous arrangement, his confidential servant, disguised as a lergy man, was to be in attendance to perform

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS. The proprietors and manufacturers of HOS-TETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BIT-TERS can appeal with perfect confidence to physicians and citizens generally of the United States, because the article has attained a repu-States, because the article has attained a reputation heretofore unknown. A few facts upon this point will speak more powerfully than volumes of bare assertion or blazoning puffery. The consumption of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters for the last year amounted to over a half-million bottles, and from its manifest steady increase in times past, it is evident that during the coming yeary the tensumption will reach near one million bottles. This immense amount could never have increased in the part of could never have been sold but for the rare medicinal properties contained in the prepara-tion; and the sanction of the most prominent physicians in those sections of the country where the article is best known, who not only recommend the Bitters to their patients, but are ready at all times to give testimonials to its officacy in all cases of stomachic derangements officacy in all cases of stomachic derangements and the diseases resulting therefrom.

This is not a temporary popularity, obtained by extraordinary efforts in the way of trum peting the qualities of the Bitters, but a solid estimation of an invaluable medicine, which is, destined to be as enduring as time itself.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters have proved a Godsend to regions where fever and ague and various other billous complaints have counted their victims by hundreds. To be able to state confidently that the "Bitters" are a certain cure for the Dyspepsia and like diseases, is to the proprietors a source of un-alloyed pleasure. It removes all morbid matter from the stomach, purifies the blood; and imparts renewed vitality to the nervous system, giving it that tone and energy indispensable for the restoration of health. It operates upon the stomach, liver, and other digestive organs, mildly but powerfully, and soon restores them to a condition essential to the healthy discharge of the functions of nature.

Elderly persons may use the Bitters daily as per directions on the bottle, and they will find per directions on the bottle, and they was more in it a stimulant peculiarly adapted to comfort per directions on the bottle, and they will make it it as timulant peculiarly adapted to comfort decilining years, as it is pleasant to the palate, invigorating to the bowels, excellent as a tonic, and rejuvenating generally. We have the evidence of thousands of aged men and women who have experienced the benefit of using this preparation while suffering from stomach degrangements and general debility; acting under the advice of physicians, they have abandoned all deleterious drugs and fairly tested the merits of this article. A few words to the gentler sex. There are certain pegiods when their cares are so harassing that many of them sink under the trial. The relation of mother and child is so absorbingly tender, that the mother, especially if she be young, is apt to forget her own health in her extreme anxiety for her infant. Should the period of materaity arrive during the summer season, the wear of for her infant. Should the period of materally arrive during the summer season, the wear of body and mind is generally aggravated. Here, then, is a necessity for a stimulant to recuporate the energies of the system, and enable the mother to bear up under her exhausting trials and responsibilities. Nursing mothers generally prefer the Bitters to all other invigorations that receive the endersement of physicians, because it is agreeable to the taste as well as extain to give a perganent increase cians, because it is agreeable to the taste as well as certain to give a permanent increase of bodily strength.

All those persons, to whom we have particularly referred above, to wit: sufferers from fever and ague, caused by malaria, diarrheea, dysentery, indigestion, loss of appelite, and all diseases or derangements of the stomach, superannuated invalids, persons of sedentary occupation, and nursing nothers, will consult. superannuated invalids, persons of sedentary occupation, and nursing mothers, will consult their own physical wolfare by giving to Hostetter's Celebrated Stomnoh Bitters a trial.
