

The above are sample specimens of Peaches which were grown in a season of extreme drought, on soil which could not have produced more than four or five bushels of wheat per acre without enriching it, and were grown on soil in which the worm insect has proven itself very injurious to the tree and fruit. And where the yellows also is subjected to enfeeble trees, inasmuch so as to cause trees to produce inferior, worthless and imperfect grown fruit, when not properly treated, and not true remedies are complied with. But with treatments favorable for their invigoration and the duration of peach trees, and for rendering them capable of producing their fruits into full perfection. The trees can be restored healthy and vigorous for scores of years, through favorable treatment.

But the true remedies which only can guarantee certain success in the cultivation of the above luscious fruit, are really not known and made use of or practised by the hundreds or thousands who are taking an interest in the cultivation of the above luseious fruit. The remedies which should be made use of are very easy to comply with, which will accomplish, and to prove very certain in effecting very good and lasting results, inasmuch so as to have proven to restore trees with rank foliage, which had already been affected with the yellows, to health, and to produce fruits which were grown in full perfection.

But in order that the whole points and mysteries can become presented in such a manner as to have full explanations to the whole and all the points, an Illustrated Map is introduced and offered for sale at a very reasonable figure. And single peach trees will, when under favorable treatment, produce fruit per anuum which will be worth more than double the cost of a map.

Single Peach trees, when under improved and favorable treatment, at a proper age, will produce fruit to the value of from $4 to $6 and $8 per-tree per-annum; and an acre-of such trees will bring in about as much profit as eight or ten acres of wheat can produce, with but comparatively little attention or labor.

There is scarcely one case of an orchardist out of hundreds of thousands who has ever realized the real value of an orehard five or ten acres in extent, because they have never given their orchard a good chance or a full trial. But there are numbers of orchards that we have an account of, which are under favorable treatment, of from five to ten acres in extent, which have yielded as much and really more clear profit per annum than a plantation of two or three hundred acres of land, under the highest state of cultivation.

But, then again, there are hundreds of thousands of orehards which scarcely prove to produce sufficient in value to justify the owners for sparing the grounds which they occupy. And why is this so? This is entirely owing to the fact, that such orchards have not the treatment rendered which they require for producing heavy incomes. And why are the masses of orchardists not more interested in rendering such treatment which is needed to enable their orchards to produce heavy incomes? This is owing to the fact, that orchardists have not the required information and instructions on those important points, and have never tried any experiments in order to make improvements, and thus have not, as yet, met with any great results and success to encourage them for giving their orchards a fair trial and chance.

What man is there who would not be encouraged if he could gain a profit of $300 or $400 per annum from an acre of land? Surely, all would be much encouraged if they could do so. That can, in a reasonable manner be done, with much convenience, if the proper means are made use of, and if a fair trial is given. The above amount can be made from one acre of land, in an orchard with good and improved treatment, and with a real good chance, and we can give good reason why.

Single apple trees, under good and favorable treatment, have proven to produce from twenty-five to forty bushels of apples, which have been sold at from 75 cents to $1.25 per bushel, which would rate the amuont of income per tree at about $25 per acre. Then just thirty trees per acre would insure an income of a fancy sum of $750. But with unfavorable treatment, such results cannot become produced, neither such heavy incomes be expected.

But a MAP is now introduced in which information can be obtained to rear up trees. which will, in due time, produce much greater incomes than the above alluded to. And if the modes, which are pointed out in the map are closely complied with, will add to render the most beneficial and improved treatment which can become rendered to orchards in all time to come.

Then it can with full assurance be guaranteed that single apple trees can become formed in due season, which will produce from forty to sixty and seventy-five bushels of apples in a season. And should any one doubt this, then they need only spare a few dollars to procure a map, and you will only need to try the improved treatment closely as directed, to the use of one tree, and in a few years you will realize the difference between making an improvement or none.

In a map it will become ascertained that there is a very beneficial improvement pointed out for preparing the soil with much convenience before planting trees in, which will insure a certain guarantee to render fruit trees very productive in low, wet and unfavorable soils, and in unfavorable seasons, and it will be found that the mode for preparing is done with much care and convenience.

In the last place, the map contains the most improved information on the keeping and preserving of all kinds of fruits, that can be introduced, to guarantee certain success, and especially for keeping apples. It points out how to put them away to insure them to keep with much success the whole year round, and especially such as Rumbo and other early winter apples; it insures their successful keeping until next harvest, or until there are apples again. The information or instruction which is contained in a map, for keeping apples with success, will be worth from five to ten and twenty times as much per annum as a map will cost to hundreds and thousands, in proportion to extent of orchards or fruit growing.

Price per single copy only $2, or ten copies to one address will be furnished for $17.50 in advance. They will be forwarded by express to any parts ordered, on receipt of the required amount.

We require and desire the names of all such, and their residences, who may at any time be found out to copy, or steal information from maps of other purchasers; or, in other words, such who refuse purchasing a map, and do not have in possession a copy themselves, but intend to copy information from maps purchased by others, such are to become reported to head querters, and expect our agents and postmasters to see to the same, as such copying and acts on the part of any, would be considered as swindling that sum out of us. As we have put the price of the map at such a very low figure, in order that it will prove in the reach of every family to procure a copy. The price of the map ought to be about ten dollars, and then the purchaser could yet double. his money ten or twenty times per annum out of it, if he makes full use of its information. But we expect every honost-thinking man will procure a copy for himself, and of course do not think of copying from those which others have purchased and paid for.

All postmasters are appointed agents to receive subscriptions and money for the same, and sending it on to us. If heavy sums are to be remitted, it would be best to remit check or draft on bank.
