- ----ONE VOTE. -- In Foster's Lives of the British Statesmen, occurs the following passage: Cromwell had offered himself as a member for Cambridge ; his opponent was John Cleve land. The contest was obstinately fierce, and ended in Cromwell's teturn, at last, by the majority of a single vote. "That vote," exclaimed Cleveland, "that vote-that single vote-hath ruined both church and state."-Everybody the least versel in English Listory knows to what extent the prophecy was fulfilled. The vote cast Charles I. his head.

Are not these fine specimens of liberly in this great and glorious country, when a man is obliged to pay taxes to support the clergy of a church in which he does not believe ?

A young man arrived here a few days ago, who came from America as the third mate of an English vessel. Ile says that on their voyage over they were boarded by a rebel cruiser and that they told the rebel that they had passed a Yankee vessel a few hours before and also told him which way the Yankee was steering ; some hours after they saw a bright light in the direction the cruiser had taken and they, supposed that the American vessel had been captured and burnt. That is a little bit of English fair play, sending a pirate after an unarmed merchant vessel. Men who act in such a manner are a disgrace to any country, particulary one whose people are supposed to be advocates of fair play. However, we can not expect much more from people who read duly the croakings of the London Times, and believe in the insane lubrications of that drunken idiot "Manhattan" whose letters adorn the pages of the "Stand and the Mor-ning Heral i," two Tory papers (christened by "Plunch," "Mrs. Gamp ' and "Mrs. Harris"). largely patronized by the aristocracy. The "Times" is in a fright about the rebel steamor "Georgia" being allowed to remain at anchor in the river at Liverpool. It thinks that if their government, (the English) is not carful it will establish a very diagerous precedent, and that in case of a war with Prussia, growing out of the Schleswig-Holstein affair : a thing not improbable, that many privateers would sait from our ports bearing the Prussian flag an l cupturing their merchant vessels. From wear I know of the enterprising spirit of some of my countrymen, I think this rather probable, and am not slow in informing my friends here of it. They have laid their own smale, let us see if they will fall in-to it. The "Herald," in an edutorial, remarks that the sooner the Nor hern States are sub-dal and humbled, the better it will be for an 'well and the rest of the world.
