After more than four years retiremen from public life, JAMES BUCHANAN appears once more before his countrymen. . He presents himself, not as Chief Executive, Cabinet Minister, Foreign Embassador, Senator, or as an aspirant for any of these positions, but in a capacity such as no other man of respectability in the country could be persuaded to assume, that of his own defender and apologist. He has written a book, entitled "Mr. Buchanan's Administration on the eve of the Rebellion," which is just now given to the public by his publishers. The reason of the production and publication of such a work is very obvious. The statesman who has for fifty years served his country, in the advancement of its interest; who has sacrificed his own personal ambition to promote its welfare, and who, on every occasion, has stood ready to defend its Government, from foreign foes and domestic traitors, has no need to spend the evening of his days in recapitulating his own achievements, or defending his conduct from the criticism of his countrymen. Such was the case with the founders of our Nation. The veteran states men who preceded Pennsylvania's favorite son in the Presidential Chair, could safely trust their record to the unpartial pen of their country's historian without a single fear that any one of them would be handed down to posterity as the faithless defender of her Constitution. Not so was the case of the Sage of Wheatland. Called to preside over the Nation under circumstances peculiarly favorable, with an experience in political af fairs such as few statesmen in the world have enjoyed, it was hoped that his administration would be conspicuous for the wisdom of its grounds include only twonty one acres which are wholly insufficient for the school. ## Items From the Reports.

We learn from the report of the Secretary of the Interior that only two survivors remain of the Revolutionary army. #### WILLIAM HOWARD DAY.

In our last we inadvertently neglected to notice an address delivered at Rheem's Hall, on Tuesday ev ning of last week, by WIL-LIAM HOWARD DAY, a noted colored orator of New York City. It was delivered under the auspices of the "Hughes League" of Carlisle, and in advocacy of the principles of that Association. The Hall was crowded, the colored people of the town turning out en masse, and very many white persons being also present. Rev. Dr. CLERC, of the Episcopal church, having read the prayers of the Church appropriate to the occasion, and Mr. HUGHES, of Harrisburg, having stated the object of the Association, the orator of the evening was introduced.

He is somewhat lighter in complexion than what is considered the standard color of his race, but his hair and features proclaim him unmistakably a negro. He is unquestionably a man of education and has the appearance and manner of a gentleman. He advocates an entire political equality for his race-contending that justice and good policy equally demand that the black man should exercise the elective franchise, sit on juries, and be eligible to office, and insisting that merit and not color should be the standard of manhood. For more than an hour and a half did the orator speak on these topics, to an audience which had never before heard arguments in their favor from the rostrum. Every one listened with the most respectful attention, and at the close, a number of gentlemen congratulated the speaker on his effort. 2.

Without any reference to the doctrines advocated by the speaker, we think that every posed crime, and his sentence to twenty one present will admit that his effort stamped him an orator of much more than usual ability. We are free to say that we have heard might have been done in case Luby should few stump speeches with which it would be permitted to enjoy his freedom. He had compare unfavorably.

We are pleased to see that the Volunteer of this week noticed the speech in what it of Capt. Peter Suter Corbet, the man who whose offence none but an English court tice, to his race five years ago, we venture the assertion that both orator and audience would have received a somewhat different notice.
