"He lives just there, sir, between the part of the road where you say he disappeared and the station," said Martin, when he had heard all the foregoing particulars; "just behind the poplars you see down youder." This opened a new view of the matter. Martin suggested that perhaps he had gone home, and that the right course might be to send there to capture him. The propriety of this, however, I doubted.

"Keep your attention fixed upon the station," I said, "and let me be informed of all that goes on there. He will find his way there at last." Martin kept his glass fixed on the little building in silence. Everything appeared to be at a stand-still for the moment, "An old woman carrying a basket his afternoons in looking out of win-
