HARRISBURG LETTER.

HARRISBURG, April 12, 1870. At high twelve on Thursday last the Legislature of 1870 adjourned without day. Before adjournment the bill increasing the salary of the State Treasurer to $5,000, and imposing new duties on the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund-passed both Houses. Thus, at last, something has been done to guard the Treasury. The Omnibus Railroad Bill found its way to the State Department on the afternoon of Wednesday, and the Governor was then first officially informed that such a measure had been passed by the Legislature. OAt eleven o'clock on Thursday, just as the business of the session was about being dropped to give place to the usual adjournment performances, the bill found its way back to the Senate, accompanied by an elaborate message, setting forth that, for sundry reasons founded on constitutional law and expediency, the Executive of the State had not given it his approval. It is needless to say that there was commotion in the Hall. The news was carried to the other end of the building, and soon the lobby was crowded with enger spectators. The effect on the Senators was comewhat diversified. Those who had supported the bill were dumbfounded, while those who had onposed its passage were elated so as to nost lese their self control. Senator Wallace moved to postpone the consideration of the veto message. This was carried, and soon an attempt was made to extend the session for a week. This was voted down as was also a motion to extend-the session to Saturday. The railroad men now gave up the fight, and soon the adjournment ceremonies began. Speaker Stinson bade his adieus to the Senate in a few well considered remarks. and Gen. Harry White who had been chosen Speaker, assumed the chair, and delivered a very sensible, salutatory. Then came the compliments of the season to the Speaker, the chief clerk, the assistant clerks, and the chaplain, and the Senate was declared adjourned.

Then Speaker Strang was presented with a costly watch and chain by the members, and a gold headed gavel by the clerks; Gen. Selfridge, with a silver set by the officers, and gold pen and pencil by the pages, and Mr. Davis of the House should be noticed at some received a beautiful cane from the officers length.
