

GREELY'S STATEMANSHIP. There are some Democratic journals who forgetting the ridicule they have bestowed on their candidate for President in former years, have the audacity now to parade him as a statesman. This is confined to a rather small number of them, the greater part overlooking the nomination as they would a careless dose of medicine. There is a man earnestly supporting him as a candidate, however, not to refer to any specific acts of his life in order to demonstrate his claim to be ranked among the statesmen of his country, but to show that he is honest, his concealed ability as a journalist.

THE statement circulating in the Democratic newspapers that Gen. Caldwell appointed the managers of election in North Carolina, is a barefaced falsehood. The managers were appointed by the county commissioners, and a very large majority of these commissioners were Democrats. It is not true that he was elected in 1850, who that party by a system of terrorism, fraud and violence, gave a majority of five thousand in the interest of the Ku Klux Klan. Let us hear something more about "fraud," gentlemen of the opposition.

Can any Republican who adhered to his party during the days of the rebellion, who supported it through evil as well as good report, afford to leave it now, when it has become a question, and has become a question of honor and respect and honor abroad? Would a soldier desert a cause which he had followed through the trials and hardships of a well-fought campaign, while enjoying the fruits of hard earned victory? Let us hear from the Republican banner in former campaigns, rally again with their old organization, and in support of the men whom their party has chosen as its standard-bearers.

GEN. DIX ON THE SITUATION. Gen. John A. Dix, the veteran soldier and civilian of New York, was lately asked to serve as a speaker for a Greeley meeting in that State. The old general gave the famous oration "If any man should have a right to be a traitor," which has since been quoted in every paper in the country. It is a masterpiece of English, and will do more for the cause than any other speech that has ever been made. It is a masterpiece of English, and will do more for the cause than any other speech that has ever been made.

"GEN. GRANT has never been defeated, and never will be."—HORACE GREELY. "While asserting the right of every Republican to his untrammelled choice of a candidate for next President to a nomination is made, I venture to suggest that Gen. Grant will be far better qualified for the position than in 1873 than he was in 1868."—HORACE GREELY. "Speech on 5th January, 1871." "GENERAL HARTMAN, as we have before said, is a good soldier and a worthy man, whom we shall, of course, support, should he be selected by our State Convention."—Philadelphia Press, April, 1872. "I know Gen. Hartman well, as both a public officer and a man. As Auditor General he has shown himself a most efficient, upright and reliable official, and as a legislator, he has shown himself a most efficient and reliable official."—Charles R. Buckalew. Hon. N. P. BANKS has been announced for sometime as a candidate to deliver a speech in Wall street, N. Y. to the business men of that city. The speech has not come off for the reason that the business men of New York take no stock in Mr. Banks' new departure. They propose to vote for Grant, in order that the prosperity of the country may receive no shock from the accession to power of the visionaries who train in Mr. Greeley's crowd.

The Republicans of New York hold a large and enthusiastic State Convention, and nominated an excellent State ticket, headed by Gen. John A. Dix for Governor, and by the most able men and purest patriots in the land. He was an original Democrat, but at the breaking out of the war espoused the cause of Republicanism ardently, and rendered effective services, both in the field and in counsel for the suppression of the rebellion. The nomination of Gen. Dix had added great strength to the Republican party in New York, and in spite of the repeating and cheating which Mr. Greeley says is always done in the interest of the Democracy in the city, the vote of the State is certain for Grant, Wilson and Dix. Hon. JAMES R. DOOLITTLE, who was one of Andrew Johnson's reformers, and who presided over the Democratic Convention which nominated Horace Greely, has had a gratuitous advertisement recently. During the time Mr. Doolittle was in the U. S. Senate, he succeeded in getting for a gentleman named Connelly a permit to trade in negroes in the South. After Connelly had obtained the permit, Doolittle sent for him and told him that he desired one-fourth of the profits for his Senatorial influence in the matter. He wanted a little further, and, in order to put things in shape, Connelly drafted a letter which he desired him to copy and sign, making such an offer to Doolittle and his own reply accepting it. These letters have been published and Mr. Doolittle finds it convenient to omit making timely speeches for the people. Mr. Doolittle is evidently a good man to make a reformer out of.
