STORMING OF CHAPULTEPEC.

We have already published an account by officers of the storming of Chapultepec and its capture by our gallant troops, but the following description by Lieutenant Charles Von Peternell, of the Ohio Volunteers, who was in the battle, describing the four more shots from the enemy, so far that the share that they had in the victory, presents a more vivid and graphic picture of the occurences than the Mexicans blazed away with their small arms was to be found in the general accounts which have been published:—Ledger.

On the evening of the 11th, about 5 o'clock Gen. Other regiments and divisions were seen to follow on their heels, in a road which led in a straight direction to the city. The scenes in the castle and neighborhood I am unable to describe. The victory was gained-the day was ours, and a nation entirely indebted to us. And this victory, in history so unique, was gained in less than three quarters of an hour. Where is there another one like it in the annals of nations? With tears in his eyes Gen. Scott expressed his thanks to us. "Had I millions of thanks to give thousand arms to press you to my bosom!" were shook hands with such of the others as were within his reach. Besides the prisoners, we found a very valuable library, and some equally costly instruments, and large stores of clothing. The latter were left for our braves to share, and in the greatest harmony these were divided. The quick eye of some hungry devil espied a good store of provisions. Ere long, where a few minutes ago balls flew the thickest, loaves of bread took their place, and whiskey ran instead of blood. Still every thing was harmony, good order and joy-expressions of which, Gen. Cadwalader could hardly restrain; when he, in a few words, thanked us for our brave-
