From Godey's Lady's Book. THE SHORE OF WRECKS

BY F. S. JEWETT.

When, in the hour of wakeful dreams, Our passions sink in pensive moud, And voiceless meditation seems A priestly heraldry of good, The trembling soul, enwrapt in fears, Subdues what virtue e'er abhors; And, wandering backward through the years, Communes with spectre monitors.

The memory is a dreary track Beside a dim and sullen deep; And we who sadly saunter back, Discourse with shadows, as in sleep: Upon that shore of solemn peace, These teachers haunt the paths we tread; And earth-born aspirations cease While there we group the quick and dead.

The rainbow showers of childhood's grief, And those delights that urged us on, Ere blooming hope had cast a leaf, Or care had dimmed the lustrous dawn, Again steal o'er us, and reveal Strange records for maturer time; And, in these lonely walks, we feel Their influence over manhood's prime.

The scenes whose ways were traveled when The heart, untutored yet in guile. In faith, observed fair deeds of men. And from them sketched the world the

Are peopled there with forms uncouth;

And there the haggard dreamer stands,

Where ships, hope-laden in our youth, Lie wrecked and rotting on the sands! We gaze, and earth's illusions fade; Truth's beacon gleams athwart the tide; And, in the startling light portrayed, Behold the fate of human pride: Its scattered fabrics moulder where

The waves remorseless, ceaseless roll-The dark, o'erwhelming waves of care, That swallowed up the eager soul. And, oh! amid this dread repose, What schemes of high renown we great!

Alas! the darksome billow strews Their towers in mockery at our feet! Heart-burnings chilled, wild visions past, With al! the glorious hues they wore; In faith exalted, left, at last, Sleer wrecks decaying on the shore!

Nor dreams of folly only-kind, Congenial passions, which the soul Embraced when first the tender mind Was conscious of their mila control -Even these upon that tide were launched, With silken sail and breeze so fair. How soon their brightened hopes wer quenched! The wave has cast the fragments there.

Ah! such the relics which appear To every retrospective gaze; Buch relics each returning year Along this desert shore displays. A thousand glittering marks we view, Where life's perspective valleys stretch; How lone, how desolate the few That greet us when those vales we reach

And by this shore of wrecks, we learn Deep lessons of mysterious lore; Whence, awed and half subdued, we turn More fitted for the scenes before: And thus the teachers of the past, That truthful world in memory's scope, Follow the pilgrim to the last, To chide regrets or chasten hope,

But a combination of circumstances may be supposed in which America, at little cost to herself, might strike us an irrecoverable blow; a crisis might arrive, when by momentarily crippling our industry she might push in and deprive us of the markets of the world. And who, should the opportunity arise, will guaranty her forbearance? AGRICULTURAL.

Farmers Should take Newspapers.

A friend of ours whose business has occasioned him to travel a good deal recently in the Western counties of this State, expressed much astonishment at the fact that L their Store Room in Ebensburg , a very many, even rich farmers, do not take a newspaper. He told us one or two instances of the sale of hogs, of the finest and fattest kind, at 11 cents, per hundred nett, when two cents might have been got so liberally bestowed upon them, they hope to just as readily, had not the farmers been merit its continuance, and beg leave to assure entirely ignorant of the state of the market. their friends and the public generally, that the He said he had no doubt, and we have as stock of goods which they now offer for sale little that hundreds of farmers will this season lose enough in this way to pay for a place. can't help feeling sorry that men are so which they have on hand, but would say it short sighted even in regard to their pockets, as well as the improvements of their Blue Black and Brown Cloths, Fancy and Plain minds but we don't know but it is wrong to be sorry, for it is their own fault, and they hardly deserve pity for losses which they make no effort to avert. Newspapers have done more for the people of this country than can be estimated; and yet there are thousand full grown men who do not see them at all except by chance. If a large majority were so indifferent and sordid as these, we should not be above the level of Mexicans, and become subject to political and other rogues, who prey upon ignorance and credulity .- State Sentinel.

Wood Houses.

There is no convenience attached to a farm establishment of more importance than the wood-houses. It need not be an expensive structure; although both convenience and economy require that its size. & adapted to the size and circumstances of the family. As a general thing, it should be place. This will be found to be the case by be a wood-house, and nothing less or more. those who will favor them with a call. No tool or farming implements should be housed there, for these require a separate place; nor should the hog have his quarters in one end. The fuel required for the use of the family, of whatever kind or description should always be found here in ample abundance, and at no time should there be a deficiency either as regards the quantity or quality of the same. Dry wood, where coal is not used, should be kept constantly on hand the year round; and in order to secure this convenience, a mond shed of ample dimensions is utterly indispensible.

perity of all communities-the very foundation of their wealth and power. It contributes more than all other interests to the potency and efficiency of any country .-Without agriculture there would be but very little commerce in the world.

Great Men .- Great men, like comets are eccentric in their course, and are formed to do extensive good by modes unintelligible to vulgar minds. Hence, like those erratic orbs in the firmament, it is their fate to be miscomprehended by fools, and misrepresented by knaves; to be abused for all the good they actually do. He has also any quantity of Notions, such and to be accused of ills with which they have nothing to do, either in design or execution.
