

reject almost contemptuously the blessings of God, and seem utterly insensible to the favors he has showered upon us. Look over the pages of ancient history, sir; look round the world as it is; and where will you find more freedom, more happiness, less oppression, less misery, than in this country? And yet we seem from time to time ready to reject all these elements of public and private prosperity, and to destroy this government, the world's best hope and our own. Instead of this eternal system of complaining, we should bow our knees in gratitude, to Him who gave us these blessings, and who, sometimes fear will strike us with judicial blindness, as He did His chosen people of old.

That we have difficulties sometimes to encounter is but the commonlot of humanity, individual as well as national; but when these come, let them be adjusted in a proper spirit of compromise, and the future may bring us all that the fondest aspiration can desire.

This petition asks us to take measures to dissolve this Union peaceably. It professes to come from the followers of Wm. Penn, the great apostle of peace: from a portion of a most respectable Society of Friends, whose high moral qualities no man appreciates better than I do. But what kind of a proposition is this? To dissolve this Union peaceably! I say it with all proper deference to the petitioners but I say it emphatically, that he who expects such a result is either already in an insane hospital or ought to be placed there. He who believes that such a government as this, with its traditions, its institutions, its promises of the past, its performance of the present, and its hopes of the future, living in the heart's core of almost every American, can be broken up without bloodshed, has read human nature and human history to little purpose. No sir; the Gordian knot that binds us together will never be severed but by the sword. To talk, then, of dissolution, is to talk of war. Both are inseparably connected, and the evil day which brings the one will bring the other. And what kind of a war will it be? Such a war, sir, as this, the world has never seen. The nearer we have been as friends, the more deadly will be our feelings as enemies. It will have all the elements of a civil war—of an intestine war. Wherever the border may be, it will be marked by blood and conflagration from one end of it to the other. Far be it from me to weigh the injuries that each portion might inflict upon the other, and then strike the balance of evil with mathematical precision. It is enough for me to know that ruinous would be the hopes of both. And where is all this to end? If jealousies and fancied rival interests, or real grievances are to divide us into two confederacies, where is that division to stop? Similar causes will exist; they are inseparable from human nature; and we shall finally be reduced to State sovereignties, and may read our fate in the fate of the Greek republics, so vividly portrayed by the ancient historians.

Why, sir, it is but a year or two since, on the occasion of a war with Mexico, that a distinguished Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. CALHOUN.] still unhappily detained from his place by sickness, depicted in glowing colors the danger of victorious generals returning from foreign conquest. I believed then, as I believe yet, that he greatly overrated the danger, and that there was a preservative force in this country, which would laugh to scorn the efforts of military power. And it was but a day or two since, that the other distinguished Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] now in his seat, pronounced a splendid eulogy upon Gen. Scott for the moderation he exhibited when he entered the capitol of Mexico. The Senator, if I recollect right, thought he deserved some distinguished mark of his country's approbation for remaining faithful to her interests and his own duties, and not placing himself at the head of a Mexican kingdom. Few men, sir, have a warmer personal regard for General Scott than I have, and perhaps fewer still place a higher estimate upon his services than I do.

nothing in our judgment, has tended more to weaken the democratic party than having, heretofore, yielded too much to the favorite measures of federalism—banks, tariffs and extravagant expenditures by the federal government for internal improvements. This, together with cherishing within its fold disorganizers, and men who have not a single principle, or feeling, in common with it, but who hang on its skirts to promote their own selfish purposes, have done it more harm than all other causes combined. The doctrine of conciliation at the expense of principle, is dishonest. The men who advocate it are not true themselves to the principles they profess, and would play the part of Best, if the occasion were presented. The conciliation of a man destitute of principle, by giving him places of honor, and profit, is treason to men of principle and integrity.
