

Come, Let Us Reason Together.

As the whig politicians are everywhere bitter in their denunciations of the revenue tariff of '46, we propose contrasting it with the one of '42, and of showing that it is not deserving the anathemas which are lavishly heaped upon the members of that party.

This law of '42 did not do. It was based upon an erroneous principle. Most of the duties it imposed were specific, or make the matter still more plain, a certain per centage was added to every square yard, without the least regard to the quality of the articles, so that the coarsest fabrics were taxed at the same rates with the finest.

The law of '46 is a much more perfect one. It is based on a different, and as we believe, a true principle. Under it the duties are levied according to the value of the article. Cloth worth five dollars per yard, is assessed with higher duties than that valued at three.

The repeatedly reiterated whig argument that high duties are necessary to the prosperity of a nation, is not only refuted by the best writers on political economy but it is also contradicted by actual observation.

But from what class of people does the existing revenue law meet with its most violent opposition? We answer from the manufacturers, and from the dealers in coals.

We believe that the true reason why so many of the manufacturers experience such disastrous failures is, in a majority of instances, fairly attributable to profligacy and extravagance on their part.

Is it right that the consumer should be oppressively taxed for the exclusive benefit of the maker? and what else, disguise it as you may, is a tariff, other than a direct tax laid in an indirect way, the consumer paying, and the manufacturer pocketing the profits thereof.
