

There are several cases of divorce now pending before the Legislature. One of Dr. Wm. Westlark of Philadelphia, praying for a divorce from his wife, one of a Mr. Elliott, praying for similar relief, and one from Edwin Forrest the tragedian, and a citizen of New York State, asking the Legislature of Pennsylvania, to break, by the fiat of their enactments, the iron cord which binds two unwilling hearts, that of himself and his wife Catherine. Now what the merits of their case are I know not exactly, but I trust the members of the Legislature will pause, before they pass bills of such moment as these, and be well convinced, before they lead themselves to the unhallowed business of striking down the most sacred relation which can exist between the sexes—a relation to which all others are but secondary.

I had almost forgotten to mention another case, that of Lieutenant Middleton, who prays for a divorce from his wife Eda. I understand that all these cases will be contested by the ladies interested. By the bye, it does not look well to see such a regiment of the Kings and Lords of Creation, asking to be absolved from the responsibility of husbands and fathers. It is a cruel commentary upon the morality, not to say the chivalry of the age. A bill has been introduced by Mr. Drum on the subject of divorces. This bill gives unlimited jurisdiction to the different courts of the Commonwealth. This I think is right, because if the courts have no jurisdiction of all cases, there will be no danger of any ex-parte proceeding. A jury of twelve men will be sworn to try the facts in each case, who will decide according to the facts, and not according to the amount of money which the libellant can bring to bear to procure a decision in his or her favor, which I am sorry to say is too often the case in the Legislature. Besides all this, the passage of this bill will deprive a few unprincipled men who hang around the capitol, session after session, like buzzards around a dead carcass of a lucrative employment. These men are the hired borers, who make money by pandering to the worst passions of humanity.

The apportionment bill is made the special order of the day for each day in the House of Representatives till it passes that body. I will send you a copy of it as soon as it passes the House. There is quite a fluttering among the whigs in reference to the apportionment bill.

Yours, &c.,
CONEMAUGH.

Clay, Webster and Calhoun.

To any one who has been in the habit of visiting Washington during the present winter, nothing will impress him more than the appearance, respectively, of the three venerable statesmen, whose names have been placed at the head of this article. The stranger, who comes to the National Capital for the first time, even before he has seen the Pennsylvania Avenue, asks to be shown CLAY, WEBSTER and CALHOUN. And when they are pointed out to him, how he will be surprised! Younger-looking and younger really than either, is Mr. Clay, and amazingly vigorous too, (as his last great speech in the Senate will show) and yet what a shadow he is of the bold, fearless, and dashing statesman, who, for the best part of half a century has electrified our new world by his eloquence, and agitated it by his measures; and who is at this moment a living link connecting the Present with the Past! See him in his blue cloak, with long sleeves, cane in hand, perambulating the streets with wide but uncertain steps, and head declined, with all his efforts to keep it erect; and the stranger will be disappointed, even if the more observant and more experienced spectator is pleased to see the veteran wear so well.

Take, next, Daniel Webster! Upon him the change effected by a few brief years, has been terrible. Time has passed heavily over him. He walks with slow and measured stride to the Senate Chamber, and pays little attention to those who gaze upon him. His cheek is pallid. His clothes hang loosely upon his feeble frame. His step is not firm. But look into his eye, which, deep as a diamond in a cavern, glows in his head, and you will see that intellect is burning bright within him. Note him in his seat in the august Senate Chamber. Sombre, silent, and solitary, he sits apart, rarely relaxing into a smile, rarely replying to an appeal, and literally glowering upon the busy scene before him, without taking part in the exercise. But rose that massive duty, and then, all parties, bow before the genius that has illuminated our annals and defended our Constitution. We are not politically a disciple of Webster; but we thank God that such a man as he is still living, to remind us that there are duties that rise entirely above party.

And now for John C. Calhoun. The last time we saw Mr. Calhoun was on a cold day in December, as, with his closely buttoned surcoat, (for he wore no cloak,) he rapidly walked to the capital. His step was firm—his form erect—his eye bright as a star in a moonless sky. Glorious Calhoun! We differ from thee in some things; and yet we admire and venerate thee. Here, now, is a purely intellectual man. He worships his favorite studies; cares nothing for the festive board; eats sparingly; and luxuriates either in elucidating some difficult problem, or in speaking to chosen friends of his darling Southern duty and her destiny. Mr. Calhoun's conversational powers are extraordinary. He talks easily, elegantly, and with exquisite clearness. His friends love him not so much for his cause, as for the manner in which he sustains his cause. He is an unexceptionably moral man. His severe tastes and stern example have a school of somewhat ascetic politicians in South Carolina. They are certainly disinterested. They are unquestionably independent. And they are notoriously brave and thorough going in whatever they undertake. We do especially admire their examples, but we should like to see the North imitating South Carolina in two things, at least; and those are, in sending none but her best men to Congress, and in keeping them there until they are no longer fit to reflect credit upon themselves and their constituents. This is the secret of southern ascendancy at Washington, so much complained of by shallow politicians in the North.

Since the assembling of the present session of Congress, each of these aged men has spoken of the slave question—Mr. Webster and Mr. Clay have taken high and patriotic ground for the Union, at all hazards, and under all circumstances. They spoke like men who felt that they had but a brief time to live; and they pleaded for the continuance of the bond which unites these States with the impassioned eloquence of auld lang syne.—Mr. Calhoun paid an unusual tribute to the Union, by rising to disavow a suspicion to the effect, that he favored disunion—which is unhappily too often the tendency of his strange philosophy. When his speech was concluded, the veteran trio met in front of the Vice President's chair, and joined hands. What a moment that must have agitated them! How, as each scanned the worn features of the other, their minds reverted back to the scenes through which they had passed, and forward to the future, in which others would be called to fill the perilous positions from which they are about to retire! No three living men have ever so completely enlisted the affection of their friends, or wielded so much influence upon the nation at large. They have seen the country in its early youth, and have assisted its growth to prosperity, with the jealous care of confiding parents. Two of them at least were foremost in support of the last war with Great Britain; and Mr. Webster sealed his devotion to the country by his memorable speech against nullification in 1833. They have often differed—and sometimes harshly and vehemently; but age has calmed their passions, and diminished their prejudices; and they now stand upon the verge of that bourne whence no traveller returns, and look with just pride upon the great country they are about to leave to Freedom and to the world—the bond of whose Union is strengthened by the attrition of opinions, and so enabled to defy the attempts of its opponents to weaken or to sunder it. May these veteran statesmen live many years, to see all their honest hopes fulfilled and all their honest fears disappointed.—Pennsylvanian.

From Santa Fe
Sr. Louisa, March, 8, 1850.

We have news from Santa Fe til 27th January.

Col. Calhoun had effected a Treaty with the Eutaws. A few days afterwards the Eutaws murdered a number of Mexicans and stole a large quantity of stock.

A party of hunters who had returned to Santa Fe had a severe fight with the Apaches, killing many. The Cheyenes also are becoming hostile. Fears are entertained that they will become troublesome to the spring emigrants.

The weather is very cold at Santa Fe. There is a great excitement about the State Territorial question.

A company of miners from Missouri are working a gold mine 25 miles from Santa Fe, with success.

Capt. St. Vrain's company were to leave for Independence on the 10th of February.

A large Benton meeting was recently held there, which approved the course of Senator Benton, and repudiated Calhoun and disunion. Bentonism is a test in the municipal elections.

Singular Freak of Nature.—The fable of Iphis and Ianthe, which forms one of the most striking tales in Ovid's Metamorphoses, was probably true after all. Just such a thing has happened in the State of Massachusetts. A petition was lately presented to the Legislature on the part of an individual in the town of Chilmark, stating that he has a child fifteen years old, which was born a female (apparently) and christened Rebecca, but that recently it has manifested itself to be of the male sex.—He therefore petitions that the name of this androgynous offspring may be changed to William. We are informed that this account is perfectly correct, and that the instance presents one of the most curious cases in physiology. Truth is stranger than fiction.—Boston Courier.

A Certain Cure for Colds.—As the season for colds is approaching, I give you a remedy I have never known to fail: Three cents worth of liquorice; three cents worth of rock candy; three cents worth of gum-arabic; put them in a quart of water, simmer them till thoroughly dissolved, then add three cents worth of paragonic, and a like quantity of antimonic wine.

Here, now, is a purely intellectual man. He worships his favorite studies; cares nothing for the festive board; eats sparingly; and luxuriates either in elucidating some difficult problem, or in speaking to chosen friends of his darling Southern duty and her destiny. Mr. Calhoun's conversational powers are extraordinary. He talks easily, elegantly, and with exquisite clearness. His friends love him not so much for his cause, as for the manner in which he sustains his cause. He is an unexceptionably moral man. Let it cool, and sip whenever the cough is troublesome. It is pleasant, infallible, cheap and good. Its cost is fifteen cents.

Do you mean to insinuate that I lie Sir? exclaimed a fierce looking, mustachied gentleman to a raw Yankee who hinted some slight skepticism as to one of his toughest statements. 'No Mister, not at all—only it kind of strikes me that, you are 'tarnal savin' of truth.'

THE valuable property in Jackson township, Cambria County, six miles west of Ebensburg, on the store Turnpike, containing about 65 of which are cleared, in good order and under good fence. There is a good two story thereon erected, now occupied as a Temperance Hotel, together with a log Stable and a log Barn. There is also on the premises a containing 150 trees, principally all grafted and bearing fruit. Running through the farm is a fine stream of water, on which is erected a good saw having the advantage of a towship road from the Turnpike leading past it. A good vein of coal is also found on the land.

FRAME HOUSE

FINE ORCHARD,

The subscriber is willing to sell said Saw Mill and 100 acres of well timbered land, separately from the other property if more convenient to purchasers. Adjoining this mill is 800 acres of well timbered land, affording a fine opportunity to any person wishing to engage in the lumbering business.

For further particulars apply to the undersigned residing on the premises.
