

certain for him to avoid it. He ran some thirty or forty yards, fell, and soon expired. After committing the brutal outrage, Hardy walked back into the house, with his knife in hand, reeking with blood, exclaiming, "I'm a tart, and that's the way I'll serve any man who'll follow me!" Some of those who heard him, thinking he had got into difficulty with a Mexican, advised him to leave, which he did. As soon as it was ascertained that he had killed Captain Brennan, men were sent to the several ferries to prevent his escape into Mexico, and others started in pursuit. He was arrested next morning about daylight, near one of the ferries, ironed and taken to jail. The only cause assigned for this brutal outrage, is the refusal of Brennan to let Hardy have money, while at Brazos, which is, in all probability, the true cause; as Hardy was heard to say, on his way up from that place, that he had marked his man.

The people of Brownsville assembled and demanded Hardy of the deputy sheriff, who, not daring to refuse, delivered him into their hands and he was sentenced to be executed. The flag thus describes the closing scene in the life of the desperado: On reaching the spot selected for this tragic scene, he remarked that he knew he had to die, and intended to die like a man; but would rather be shot than hung. The crowd assembled to witness the solemn tragedy was quite large, but orderly and quiet, with a few exceptions. No one volunteering to shoot the guilty, hardened wretch, it was decided that he must hang. During all this time, and even while arrangements were making for launching him into eternity, where he would meet a more dreaded tribunal than any on earth, he evinced the most perfect indifference as to his fate, not suffering a muscle of his face or limbs to betray the least emotion; and even took the rope that was to hang him and tied the hangman's knot to show how it was done, without the slightest perceptible tremor of the nerves. Those managing the matter, fearing the knot was not well tied, untied it for the purpose of retying, in which they failed, when he remarked to a gentleman standing near him that he would have to tie it again. This kind of indifference to his fate, and the performance of him, the doomed man then got into a cart, mounted on a plank which rested on the wheels, without any resistance or assistance, and, while the rope which was suspended from a beam used in hoisting beaves, was being adjusted around his neck, asked to have his hands tied behind him. There he stood, high above the crowd, his hands tied, the noose close about his neck, death staring him in the face, calm, cool and collected. The cart moved from under him, and in this condition he was hurried into eternity. Such a spectacle we never witnessed before—may be never again. It was evidently his intention to have leaped from the cart, but he was prevented from so doing by some one attracting his attention as it started, which caused his feet to drag from the tail. He died after a slight struggle, and thus terminated the earthly career of Bill Hardy, who had been the terror of every community in which he lived. He met death with the same reckless indifference that he had meted it out to others.

Perilous Balloon Ascension.

At the meeting of the Academy of Science on Monday, M. Arago gave an account of an unsuccessful balloon ascension, which became almost disastrous, attempted two or three days before by M. M. Bixio and Barral, two scientific men of Paris. The object of the adventurers was to ascend the height of 7 miles, to ascertain the decrease of temperature & the density of the air; to make hygrometrical and barometrical observations; in short to complete the information which the ascensions of Gray Lassic, many years ago, left imperfect. The ascension took place at 10 A. M. A large number of savans had assembled on the terrace of the Observatory as interested spectators. The balloon was made with great care, and, according to custom, was only two third filled with gas. Considering the extraordinary height to which it was proposed to mount, hydrogen was used to inflate it. But the net work of strong cord which envelopes the balloon had been hastily prepared, and received at the last moment, and proved to be too small. The cords were cut, and in one minute and a half, so rapid was the ascent, the travellers were lost in the clouds. Arrived at a height of about three thousand yards, the dilatation of the gas was rapidly progressing. All worked well until the net ceased to be ample enough to contain the balloon. Then their trouble and danger commenced. The balloon became more and more elongated below, till the travellers and their car were completely enveloped in its folds, and were in imminent danger of suffocation. In fact, the car had not been suspended sufficiently low.

At this critical moment, M. Barral cut in the bottom a large hole with his knife. Then they were almost stifled to death by the escaping gas. Their elevation now was about three and a half miles. The hole cut by M. Barral checked the ascent, and determined a downward movement. An accident, ripped a large hole in the top of the balloon, and down down, down they fell with fearful rapidity. The clouds soon appeared about them—above them. The descent was checked an instant by throwing out all the weights, but the rapid escape of gas soon rendered this of no avail, and the aeronauts saw that speedy violent collision with the earth was inevitable. It occurred in a vineyard near Meaux, twenty-one or twenty-two miles northeast of Paris. M. Bixio, who is a member of the Assembly, exminister of commerce, a naturalist, and more a savan than a politician, and not very much of anything, escaped unhurt. His companion got off with some scratches and bruises, which are not very serious, but sufficiently so to have confined him since the accident to his bed. These accidents rendered the ascension almost void of scientific interest.

Woman in Male Attire.

Among the schemes advocated by the female reformers of the present day, there is none more startling than that which aims at the overthrow of distinction in costume of the sexes. As a general thing the reformers either deny the existence of this project, or forbear to advocate it publicly; but the appearance of a pamphlet from the Brussels press, written by Miss H. M. Webber, in which the male attire is boldly and ingeniously recommended as the "most appropriate costume for single females," and shows all doubt upon the subject, or moves conclusively that the scheme is seriously entertained. Miss Webber is a graceful and vigorous writer, and treats her subject with apparent firmness. She adduces authorities to prove that, in early ages men and women dressed precisely alike; and that the distinction in dress which now exists arbitrarily drawn by the male sex, in the tyrannical exercise of power which they derived solely from their greater physical superiority.

Her plan is to restrict girls to their frocks until the completion of their education. Upon their entrance into society they are to dress precisely like males of similar conditions, and continue to wear male attire until the day of their marriage. Widows at the end of the mourning season are to resume men's apparel, unless they have determined never to marry again. In effect, this is a scheme to distinguish marriageable females from married women and confirmed widows. Regarded in this light it has least one merit, and may on that account claim the friendly countenance of the bachelor fraternity. It would save them a vast deal of trouble ascertaining the domestic rank of a new lady acquaintance and prevent them from committing the now common error of falling in love with married women.— Holden's Mag.

Our Claims upon Portugal.

A private letter from Lisbon, dated 2d instant, says: "The Peninsular mail steamer, Montrose, arrived yesterday, and I have reason to believe no new instruction have been received by Mr. Clay from the U. S. respecting the settlement of the claims upon Portugal. You may consequently rely upon the information I have already given you, to the effect that no coercion will be used against this government if Mr. Clay is not satisfied—as I do not think he will be—on the 11th inst. In fact, I understand Mr. Clayton again stated, at Washington, that the matter must be submitted to Congress, if Mr. Clay fails in his negotiations, and demands his passports. "The Council of State sat upon these claims for six hours on Sunday; opinions were much divided. Some councilors wished to refuse the whole of them, but according to the ultimate decision, the Counts Thomas and Tojal had a conference yesterday with Mr. Clay, assisted by the American Consular agent (Mr. J. E. Martin, a British merchant of this city,) and although the parties are still much at variance as to the amount admissible by the Portuguese government, which still refused in toto the General Armstrong claim. Another council is to be held tomorrow before the Queen, when I suppose a final decision will be come to as to the amount to be offered to Mr. Clay on or before the 11th."

The California Emigration.—During this season to the 17th of June, 30,964 men, 439 women, 508 children, 7113 wagons, 10,880 horses, 6571 mules, and 18,238 cattle have passed Fort Laramie on their way to California.
