

CRIME IN GREAT CITIES.

The Recent Tragedies.

It is the remark of Balzac, we think, that at certain periods, particular crimes become epidemic, or follow each other in such rapid succession, that one would seem to be suggested or induced by the horrors of that which preceded it. And thus the question has been started by some, as to the policy of publishing all the details of these particular crimes, while a thousand false stories would be circulated from lip to lip, and many scenes of violence be produced, which are now avoided.

was not have done it except it was to save his own life; he said he was very sorry, but did it to save his own life; he did not request to be executed. The remains in the room were not locked, but when I left to come here I locked the door, and he was in the back room; when I came out I locked the door, locking him in; I came with Madame Barker; when we left the hotel it was half past two o'clock; Mr. De Corn was in a closet adjoining my room at the time; I think Mrs. Barker took charge of the key of my room door; I solemnly swear that I heard my husband say, if he could ever meet Mr. De Corn alone he would kill him; he gave no reason, but I think he was just; he said that he never wished me to speak to him; I heard Mr. De Corn say that he would always be on his guard for my husband, but that he would never injure him unless he would attack him first; he did not say he would kill him, but would defend himself; Mr. De Corn was a good friend to my husband, and loaned him money; Mr. De Corn was a witness to our marriage.

An Irishman comparing his watch with the town clock, burst'd into a fit of laughter. Being laughed at, he replied, how can I help it? Here is my little watch that was made by Paddy O'Flaherty, on Ormond Quay, and which only cost me five guineas, has beat that big clock there a full hour and a quarter since yesterday morning.
