

Size of the Ark.

Infidels have objected to the size of the ark, and have asserted that it is quite absurd to suppose that ever there could be a vessel constructed large enough to hold all the creatures which must have been placed in it, with sufficient food for the fishes, and so on. Now, we will take the dimensions of the ark from the record of Moses, and calculate them on the lowest possible scale. There are two editions of a cubit; one that is eighteen inches, the other that is one foot and eight inches.—We will take it only as the lowest. Moses states that the ark was three hundred cubits long; this would make it four hundred and fifty feet long, or about the length of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. The breadth he states to be fifty cubits, we then have it seventy-five in breadth. He states it to be thirty cubits high; so that it was forty-five in height. In other words it was as long as St. Paul's Cathedral, nearly as broad, and half as high. The tonnage of the ark, according to the calculation of modern carpenters, must have been thirty thousand tons. The largest English ship, of a size altogether unimaginable to those who have never seen it, is two thousand five hundred tons burden: so that the ark must have been equal to seventeen first-rate ships of war, and, if armed as such ships are, it would have contained beyond eighteen thousand men, and provision for them for eighteen months. Buffon has asserted that all four footed animals may be reduced to two hundred and fifty pairs, and the birds to a still smaller number. On calculating, therefore, we shall find that the ark would have held more than five times the necessary number of creatures, and more than five times the required quantity of food to maintain them for twelve months.—Dr. Cumings.

The Man who Advertised his Farm, and the Man who did Not.

Every body is acquainted with Samuel A. Walker, Esq., the celebrated auctioneer, and almost every body, when they have anything to sell by auction, call on him. A month or two since the auctioneer was sitting in his office, reading one of the daily papers, when a well appearing man entered and inquired for Mr. Walker. The auctioneer said in his happiest manner that he was the individual, and at the same time desired the visitor to be seated. The stranger gave his name, and said he resided in Saugus, on the border of Malden, and having bought dry goods and sundries of the auctioneer when he was in that line in Kilby street, he had now come to renew his acquaintance, and to get him to sell some land which he owned in Malden. He stated to Mr. Walker that he only wanted his services as a salesman—he, the owner, would do the rest. He did not intend to have any advertisements in the newspapers, as he had given notice at the last town meeting that he should sell his land at auction, and that was notice enough. The owner desired to secure the services of Mr. Walker for the day, and inquired his price. The amiable auctioneer said he would go down and sell for him for one dollar. This was agreed to, only it was stipulated that the auctioneer should pay his own fare each way. This Mr. Walker agreed to, and his visitor delighted with having secured the services of the auctioneer for so low a figure, after paying the one dollar to the auctioneer who then secured his customer, and the business of the morning went along as usual. When the day appointed for the sale arrived, the auctioneer hastened to the cars and was soon landed at the depot at Saugus where the owner of the land was anxiously awaiting his arrival. He was overjoyed at seeing him, and after exchanging the compliments of the morning, and taking a glass of cold water, the land owner and the auctioneer, the former with a spy glass and the latter with a small red flag, were seen footing it for the location of the land which he was to sell. After a dusty walk of half an hour they arrived at the spot, and remained for an hour after the time the sale was to commence—the owner and the auctioneer being the only persons within two miles of the place about to be sold by auction. The owner wondering why the people did not come, and the auctioneer wondering why they should come—thus ended the unadvertised land sale.

A few days after the old foggy sold his land at private sale to a well known operator in real estate, for six thousand dollars, which the price he paid for it some seven years since, wisely coming to the conclusion that he was behind the times, and could not make much by selling land at auction, even if he employed a Boston auctioneer. All the foregoing happened in April of the present year. About the first of May another stranger called on the same auctioneer, and said he had a beautiful place in Malden, near Saugus to sell by auction. The auctioneer said he had some experience down that way, and did not care to risk his hard-earned reputation and his time by again visiting Malden professionally. The stranger was in earnest, he described the place and gave name of the previous owner, when it came out that the auctioneer was a second time called upon to sell what he facetiously called the dollar farm. The auctioneer declined at first to have anything to do with the matter. The new owner was a man of progress, not an old fog. He is acquainted with business and up with the times. He said to the auctioneer, I want your services as auctioneer, and I authorize you to spend not exceeding five hundred dollars in procuring plans and in placing before the people this valuable property, for valuable I know it to be.

The auctioneer and the owner on the following day visited the spot, and a few days afterwards a beautiful lithographic plan of the farm was placed on our table, and in the commercial papers and nearly all the other dailies, appeared one of those brilliant and attractive advertisements for which Walker is so celebrated, setting forth in truthful terms the advantages of the location about to be sold by him at auction. The day of sale arrived, nearly a thousand persons attended, every lot was sold, the aggregate amount of which was near twelve thousand dollars, the operation yielding the owner a net profit of over five thousand dollars after paying the usual commission to the auctioneer and all other charges. Every one was pleased with his purchase, and several new houses are now being built upon the premises, all of which may be seen as the passengers pass along the railroad.—Judicious advertising and a proper expenditure, always results favorably; old foggy would take warning from the fate of the old man who did not advertise.—Boston News
