Select Poetry.

The Heart that loves truly can never forget.

BY MARY G. NOLL.

Had I loved thee for honor Had I loved thee for gold, 'Neath the storm of misfortune My love had grown cold; Had I loved thee for beauty. Had I loved thee for fame, I should have forsook thee In"sorrow and shame ,---But I loved not for riches, I loved thee alone, And would have shared with thee A cot or a throne.

They told me in triumph, They tell me e'en now, Thou wert false to thy honor, And false to thy vow ; That thou wert unworthy Of the heart that I gave, Less fickle the zephyr-More stable the wave : But their efforts were vain, We had met ! we had met ! And the heart that loves truly Can never forget!

Think not that the wealthy May purchase for gold. The heart's warm affections-Those riches untold ; That time, chance or distance Can alter my love. That absence may weaken, Or slander may move.

Remember! Remember ! By land or by sea, Whatever may happen Where'er thou may'st be! Ah! gentle lad, With the eye of blue, To the troth of our plighting I am true! I am true!
