

A Perfect Wife.

We give below, Edmund Burke's description of a "perfect wife." Its great merits will excuse its length. It was intended as the picture of his own wife:

I intend to give my idea of a woman; if it at all answers any original, I shall be pleased. She is handsome, but it is a beauty not arising from features, from complexion, or from shape; she has all three in a high degree, but it is not by these that she touches the heart; it is all that sweetness of temper, benevolence, innocence, but sensibility, which a face can express, that forms her beauty. She has a face that just raises your attention at first sight; it grows on you every moment, and you wonder it did no more than raise your attention at first. Her eyes have a mild light but they awe you when she pleases. They command like a good man out of office, not by authority, but by virtue. Her features are not perfectly regular; that sort of exactness is more to be praised than to be loved; for it is never animated. She has all the softness that does not imply weakness. There is often more of the coquette shown in the affected plainness, than in a tawdry fineness; she is always clean, without preciseness or affectation. Her gravity is a gentle thoughtfulness that softens the features without discomposing them; she is usually grave. Her smiles are inexpressible. Her voice is a low, soft music, not formed to rule in public assemblies, but to charm those who can distinguish a company from a crowd. It has this advantage; you must come near her to hear it. To describe her body, describes her mind; one is the transcript of the other. Her understanding is not shown in the variety of matters it exerts itself on, but in the goodness of the choice she makes. She does not display it so much in saying or doing striking things, as in avoiding such as she ought not to say or do. She discovers the right and wrong of things, not by reasoning, but sagacity; most women, and many good ones, have a closeness and something selfish in their dispositions; she has a true generosity of temper; the most extravagant cannot be more unbounded in their liberality, the most covetous not more cautious in their disposition. Her politeness seems to flow rather from a natural disposition to oblige, than from any rules on that subject; and therefore never fails to strike those who understand good breeding and those who do not. She does not run, with a girl's eagerness, into new friendships, which, as they have no foundation in reason, serve only to multiply and embitter disputes; it is long before she chooses, but then it is fixed forever; and the first hour of romantic friendship is not warmer than hers after the lapse of years. As she never disgresses her good nature by severe reflections on any body, so she never degrades her judgment by immoderate or ill-praises; for everything violent is contrary to the gentleness of her disposition, and the evenness of her virtue; she has a steady and firm mind, which takes no more from the female character than the solidity of marble does from its polish and lustre. She has such virtues as make us value the truly great of our own sex; she has all the winning graces that make us love even the faults we see in the weak and beautiful of hers.

Substitute for Rags in Paper Making. Our exchanges from the Atlantic States contain favorable notices of the newly discovered paper plant which grows spontaneously and abundantly in Canada. We do not entertain a doubt that this plant, which appears to have as many virtues as a pickpocket, will supply the material for the manufacture of paper that will surpass in quality and economy that now made from rags. In Canada, the name commonly given to the plant is "sandwood," another is "life-everlasting." In the notice we now give, the botanical name is said to be "Gnaphalium." The writer of this notice, as will be seen, speaks very favorably of this plant as a substitute for rags in paper making. It is said that the experiment to make paper out of an American plant, called "white top," or "immortelle," has been successful. The botanical name is Gnaphalium, and the paper is therefore called "Gnaphalium paper." The plant is very abundant in Canada. The paper is glossy, smooth, and thin, and evidently much stronger than that kind in the manufacture of which cotton is so largely used. The stalk as well as the flower of the plant may be employed, but from the white silky flowers alone a finer and whiter article can be produced. The manufacturers assert that, without taking into consideration the difference of the cost of materials, paper may be made from this plant at 12 1/2 per cent. less expense than rags. The adhesive qualities of the plant are such that in the manufacture of the paper no animal matter need be used, and a good surface is obtained without sizing.
