of English riftemen with a body of Russians, the latter were defeated. The reported battle on the 13th, turns out to have been a mere sortic of the Russians, who were driven back 40 men.

Prince Menschikoff states, that on the 24th the fire of the allies had become very feeble. But a despatch from Constantinople states that the bembardment had been renewed.—
The allies were surrounded and protected by an enormous circumvallation, consisting of curtains with advanced bastions, and immense repelled several sorties, and there were constant affrays between the pickets. Fresh reinforcements were arriving daily, and the men were busy hutting themselves. Flags of truce had passed between the Generals, and it was agreed to exchange Lord Dunkellen, by desire of the Czar, for a Russian Captain.

In an attack on Eupatoria, the Russians had been driven back with considerable loss.

Movements of the Russians on the Pacific. The increase and extent of power on the part of Russia within the past forty years, has been scarcely any greater along the line of the Danubian provinces, and in the direction of the Caspian, than in North-eastern Asia, and it is a well-known fact that for many years past there has been a continued migration of opposite the Post Office, one door west of J. Colonists from Ochotsk to the shores of the Moore's, where can be had very cheap Japanese Sea. This progress of Russia in Asia, within the past five or ten years, has been such as to rival in extent the spread of our republican sway on the opposite shores of America. Russian steamers ply upon the Sea of Aral and upon the Ozas, Russian engineers explore Mongolia between Thibet and the Altai, and build forts along the Steppes, and missionaries have crossed into Machuria, and, it is said, with designs which they do not attempt to conceal. It is the intention of these zealots to cross over to the northern islands of Japan, whither there can be no doubt, Russian dominion would soon follow them.

The recent accounts published in this paper of the movements of the Russians in Machuria-of their military works and internal navigation-leave no doubt as to the designs of the Autocrat. It was even rumored in the East, a few months since, that his agents and ships had obtained important advantages in Japan. This does not appear to be the fact as yet, though we can hardly suppose these advantages will be long forthcoming.

We leave it to our countrymen to judge whether, in the event of Russia obtaining mastery of the trade of Japan, America can long remain a disinterested spectator. We leave it for them to determine whether we could accept the unequal conditions of rivalry for the Eastern trade, which alone Russia in competition could offer. We shall not make up our mind to fraternize with our Autocrat neighbor until we can know their opin-
