

Sowing Cloverseed.

Sowing cloverseed in the spring upon grain, or upon land that had been previously seeded with timothy, is so well understood in this region, that information upon this subject is scarcely information at all. Still we may not be doing any harm, in giving the method of an Indiana farmer, which will be found detailed below. The objection to sowing in the chaff, is the uncertainty of the quantity sown—otherwise the views of our Indiana friend may possess some weight:—

My time for sowing is in the 3d month (March) about the last freeze, or cold spell, when the ground is frozen; if rain or wet weather precedes it, there will be icicles, as it were, oozed out of the ground, the seed falls between these, and when melted covers the seed nicely; it saves the trouble of harrowing, which is recommended by many, and is considered indispensable to late sowing. I also find, by experience, that sowing in the chaff is much the surest plan, as the hull or chaff, that encloses the seed, in dry weather holds moisture, and in late frosts or freezes, after the germ has made its appearance, it protects and serves as a manure to strengthen the germ. Two years ago this spring, a neighbor sowed the same way I did, the fields adjoining—he put in clean seed, I sowed in the chaff; the result was, that mine was pretty well set, while his was an entire failure. I sow 10 bushels in chaff on ten acres, having the previous fall sown it with timothy seed—that is equal to one clean. Sow plenty of seed and you are almost sure of having a good set.

Cheap Compost for Manure.

Having received the credit for two years of having as good pieces of corn as any in our neighborhood, and attributing our success mainly to the use of a single handful of cheap compost, dropped in each hill before planting the corn, we give you a statement as to how we form it.

Supposing a load to contain about twenty-five bushels, we take two loads of muck manure from our hog-yard, one load of wood ashes, and three bushels plaster par. Work the parts thoroughly together with a hoe or shovel. Our corn ground having received a coating of manure before plowing, the harrow follows the plough length wise of the furrows until the soil is well pulverized. We mark one way for the hills with a shallow furrow of the plow, and then draw a chain the other way which shows the place for each hill. The compost gives the corn a good start, and the manure helps it out. We have also, for the two years past, soaked our seed corn in a strong solution of tobacco water, and have not been troubled much with worms. Let it remain in the solution from twelve to twenty-four hours. Wm. E. Cowles, Canton Connecticut.—Country Gentleman.

Time to grow Grass Seed.

Various opinions prevail as to the most suitable time to grow grass seed.

There are records as to its success at all times, from the last of February to the middle of June. Some tell us the best time is the new of the moon.

I believe the whole matter lays in the seed being sown at such time, and with such care, that the young rootlets can be well formed and imbedded in the soil before hot, dry weather.

In seeding clover upon fields of wheat, the last of February to the middle of March, experience has shown is the most certain period of success, simply because the action of frost upon the soil tends to cover the seed, and thus and its germination. Seed sown with spring crops of rye, barley, wheat, or oats, should always be lightly harrowed in, often a simple brushing over the land will do; and this is perhaps the most advisable on clayey lands, and fields sown very early in the season. The true, and most profitable mode of obtaining a good meadow, is to sow only the grass seed and not with other crops as is the general custom; this I did last season, and notwithstanding the dry season I cut more (later in the season to be sure) to the acre, than upon a meadow seeded the year previous in the ordinary way.

Old Apple Trees.

If you have healthy trees, they will yield you a return for working them over and cultivating them much quicker than you can possibly get it from young trees. A large, sound old apple tree, though producing only crab apples, if it stands near home and convenient for cultivation, is worth more than fifty dollars. We have seen a tree which, we have repeatedly been informed more than 20 barrels of marketable apples have been taken in a single year. It is a Baldwin, and bears more or less, every year—but has every advantage which high cultivation affords. The modes of grafting are well understood. We will only and what seems not to be fully appreciated yet—that an apple tree needs cultivation just as much as a hill of corn, and will not flourish well without it.—N. E. Fagner.

Grafting.

Grafting is performed in the spring. The last of March is the proper time for plums and cherries; and April for all others. In grafting, thrifty young stocks should be preferred. The operations is simple and consists in cutting off the stock at the point where we wish to insert the scion, and splitting the stock down in the centre; the scion is cut at the lower end, in the form of a wedge, and inserted in a split in the stock; the outside bark of the scion should fit snugly the bark on the stock. A salve made of one pound of beeswax, six of rosin, melted with one pint of linseed oil, is then used to cover the seams made in the operation, so as to render the whole air-tight; the salve should be looked to occasionally, and kept smooth and tight on the seams; if it sometimes gets open and lets in the air, which will destroy the scion. Scions should be of the last years growth, and have upon each two or three buds.

REMEDY FOR THE PEACH WORM.

Lay around each tree, say April, half a peck to a peck of air-sacked lime, or a week ash. Spread them over the ground in the fall, and it will make a good dressing. Renew again in the spring. Besides this, examine the trees several times during the season, and if the grub has made its way into any of the trees, cut it out. Covering the tree with manure at the time the fly lays her eggs, might be effectual. The point attacked is generally at the ground.—Horticulturalist.

Prune your Grape Vines.

The season for trimming grape vines has arrived. Do not let it pass until the warm weather has started in the spring, or you will kill your vines.
