A Persecuted Young Woman.

The Ray. Dr. Thompson, writing from Paris, relates the following:—While scated one morning in the office of the American Ambassador, Mr. Mason come in, and after the usual salutations, said, "Did you ever get into a profuse perspiration, and have a wet blanket thrown over you?" "No." "I did yesterday. A lady came to me with the following narrative:—'I am from the United States, and have in care a young lady who has been visiting her friends in this country. She is a Protestant, and her father and mother, when dying, charged her never to forsake er, when dying, charged ber never to forsake her faith or marry a Catholic. She has, more-over, a Protestant friend in the United States, to whom she is attached, and to whom on her return to New York she expects to be mar-ried. While in the South of France, she met a French gentleman who was smitten with her; he procured an introduction to her, and has been courting her with unremitting atten-tions ever since. She has used every measure to shake him off, she has frowned upon him; she has told him that she can never marry she has told him that she can never marry him, that it is utterly impossible; that his attentions are unpleasant, wearisome, disgusting, even painful to her, and she has peremptorily ordered him never again to see her. He replies, "That is impossible tiff I die. I cannot live without seeing you." We came to this city in hopes to escape him, but he watched our movements, and came with us. We sought to hide from him here; but he has found as out. We have told him we shall leave the country, and that he had better return home.

'No, no' says he. 'I will go with you when 'No, no,' says he, 'I will go with you when you go, I will stop when you stop, I will stay where you put up, I will live where you live, I will die where you die.' Now, can nothing he done to save us from this annoyance?" Mr. Mason said he immediately sent for the Presence of the eld lady. "Your troubles are at an end," said the police officer, "the young man will see your ward no more. Give me his name and address, we will cominand him, and if he obey not, we have a way of making him obey," Mr. M. returned with the old lady to her lodgings, and announced to the young one the joyful news of her deliverance from the annoyance to which she had been subjected, when lo! with a gush of grief she cried, "Oh, you have been so cruel as to ap'y to the police? You will wound the young man's feelings. O, he is such a fine, such a noble young man! I would suffer maything rather than wound his heart." "I started homeward," said Mr M., "immediately, saying within myself, we have been do-ing mischief; they will be married as sure as the world. No resisting French enthusiasm.

It will be seen by the selection that the Cameron faction has been repudiated in all the most important offices. It is understood that M'Creary had better than 400 majority over Charles Frailey, the Cameron candidate. So far the anti-Cameron Know-Nothings have gained a decisive victory over their antagonist, and that was an easy matter where everything was left to the rank and file. No everything was left to the rank and hie. No indiscriminate gathering of the people could be made in which a majority, would go in with their eyes open, for a general system of public plunder, or in other words, for Cameron.

But now comes the danger. Hereafter until election, the affair will be managed between the candidates and the Cameron wire-pullers. The candidates and the Cameron wire-pullers. The candidates will be desperately in want of votes; the high priest of Cameronism won't give them a vote without a compensation, and that compensation must be a pledge of devotion to Cameron after election. This has been the policy of that faction for years, and the Democratic party has never been half as disgracefully defeated, as when, in many interests it elected its own field. stances, it elected its own ticket. The same game will be played on the Know-Nothings, unless they compel their nominees to give public pledges of fidelity before the election.—

in Virginia a few weeks ago, has had a wedge driven straight, through him at Philadelphia. He is split "from stem to stern," and his most skillful surgeons admit the impossibility of uniting the parts. In conducting the siege of Sebastopol, Gen.

CANROBERT had recourse to stink-pots to drive the Russians out of their rifle pits. The leader of Sam's southern division in the National Council, taking a hint from Cannonner, al Council, taking a hint from Cannobert, threw that great political stink-pet, the "nigger," straight in the face of the opposing division. The effect was immense! Men who had nerve enough to steal a nigger in the dark, were reduced to a state of asphyria when the nigger was thrust under their nose in broad day light. The moment they recovered their breath, they scratched out of Sam's rifle pit as if the very Old Scratch himself was after them. With wistful eye and watery mouth they gazed at the flesh-pots, but the stink-pots were a trifle too strong for them. Sam's Sebastopol is taken. One-half his army is destroyed—stifled by a stink-pot! my is destroyed—stifled by a stink-pot!—
