

Interesting Foreign Items.

LIVERPOOL, Saturday, July 14, 1855. A telegraphic despatch from London received just before the departure of the Atlantic, announces that Lord John Russell has resigned his seat in the Cabinet.

INTERESTING FROM RUSSIA. A letter from Warsaw of the 5th, in the Constitutionnel, says:—

The Councillor of State, de Kotzebue, arrived here yesterday from Sebastopol, and immediately had an audience of Prince Paskevitch, to whom he delivered letters from Gen. Gortschakoff. The picture which M. de Kotzebue draws of the state of the Crimea is far from satisfactory. General Gortschakoff, it is said, complains that the reinforcements both of cavalry and infantry, and supplies of provisions passing through Perekop, were advancing but very slowly, but in consequence of the want of water in the steppes, where the thermometer at times stood at 34 Reaumur (93 Fahrenheit), it was necessary to have the troops fed by an immense number of vehicles carrying water. These reinforcements were decimated by disease on their march, and the remainder, on arriving at Sebastopol, only served to fill the hospitals. Simpheropol and Bakhshisarai are so full of sick that it has been found necessary to establish ambulances under tents.

The mortality, owing to the extreme heat, is described as frightful. The town of Sebastopol is said to be in a desperate state—not a house but has suffered from the shot and shell of the Allies. The Russian army at Sebastopol has been weakened by 10,000 men by the affairs of the 7th and 18th of June, without reckoning those who have died from cholera and other diseases. The allies have rendered their position between Balaklava and Inkermann impregnable, so that in case of an assault, General Gortschakoff cannot assist the garrison by making any diversion on that side. It is supposed that the garrison will blow up all the public buildings, and only leave to the assailants a heap of ruins. All the articles of value belonging to the Crown have been removed to Perekop. The account of the death of Lord Raglan has been given to-day in the official journal. Another journal puts out the losses of the Russian army. His best Generals—Korniloff, Gotschakoff, Timoffeff, Simonoff, Schilder, Orbellian, and several others have been killed; and Woronoff, Menschikoff, and Dannenberg have retired.

More than five hundred officers of all ranks have been already lost by this war. It is said that Gen. Gortschakoff is urgent for officers, and that he has written on this subject to Prince Paskevitch. The object of the visit of the Grand Duke Michael to this city is the subject of general conversation. He was, it is said, charged to sound the feelings of Prince Paskevitch, as to his taking the command of the army of the Crimea; but the Prince is said to have refused, on the plea of his health and the promise of repose made to him by the late Emperor. The cholera is daily carrying off from eighteen to twenty persons here, and it is extending its ravages along the Vistula as far as Cracow. At Cracow 371 fatal cases occurred in four weeks. Reports are current here of some disturbances in the country of the Dnieper. Six regiments of Cossacks are being formed for the defence of the empire in the government of Poltava and Tschernigoff.

A letter from St. Petersburg of the 26th ult., in the Wanderer of Vienna, says:— It is generally rumored that the Emperor is to start very shortly for the south; but it is not known whether he is going to visit the Crimea or some other part of the coast of the Black Sea. It is also stated that the Grand Duke Nicholas is to visit those parts immediately after his return from the Baltic. Prince Michael is to go to Warsaw again, they say, to assume the government of Poland, Prince Paskevitch only retaining the supreme command of the army. Prince Gortschakoff is spoken of as likely to be recalled from the Crimea, and entrusted with the portfolio of War, while that of Police is to be given to Prince Delgorouki, and Count Orloff is to have the presidency of the Council of Ministers. Numerous other changes, both in the machinery of the administration and in the list of functionaries, are contemplated. The present relations with Prussia appear to be so intimate that an offensive and defensive alliance is spoken of as having been concluded between the two Powers, and all contingencies having been therein duly foreseen. This rumor, however, is not in accordance with the note of Baron Mantouff of the 6th, in which mention is made of the obligations of Prussia towards Austria, and of the two first points of guarantee.

A letter from Berlin of the 7th says:— The Russian Prince Woronoff, who is at present at Dresden, for the benefit of his health is shortly expected at Berlin. Some German newspapers announce—no doubt at his request—that he possesses either chateau or estate in the Crimea, and that consequently the English cannot have spared either, as has been reported.

AMERICAN POLICY AT THE VIENNA CONFERENCE.

[From the London Times, July 13.] In the course of a very short speech Lord John Russell last night committed two inaccuracies so remarkable as to suggest a suspicion that his Lordship has lost somewhat of his usual clearness by his abortive attempt at diplomacy. The first of these was in his reply to Mr. Disraeli, who had asked whether his Lordship had obtained her Majesty's consent to the statement he made last Friday night with respect to the proceedings of the Cabinet. It was notorious, Lord John Russell observed, that he had brought proposals from Vienna, which, as a matter of course, the Cabinet would look at; and it was also notorious that the negotiations had come to a close, and we were still at war; it followed, as a matter of course, that the Austrian proposals had been rejected. So what had his Lordship now told more than everybody knew? The question was a bold one; for it admits of a prompt reply. We are indebted to Lord John Russell for a considerable addition to the notoriety he referred to. He communicated to us on Friday the exact nature of the Austrian proposals, and the additional fact that he and the French Minister were fully of opinion that they contained the elements of peace. It is true that the Austrian version of the affair was already before the world. It is true, also, that before last Friday, before the promulgation of the Austrian statement, even very soon after Lord John Russell's return, the substance of his present revelation had been whispered about. This, however, was no excuse for the alleged breach of ministerial secrecy, but rather an aggravation, particularly when it is found that the persons in possession of the secret—the people who went about London saying that Lord John Russell had returned from Vienna a thorough convert to the Austrian policy, and ready to make peace on any terms—were the very statesmen who had recently succeeded from the Cabinet, and who evidently felt that, though they had sacrificed themselves, their cause was triumphant, and they had an ally in the Ministerial camp. It cannot be doubted that the privacy of Her Majesty's council had been broken in some way or other, and as Lord John Russell considerably exemplified the disclosure, divulging some very interesting particulars, it was natural to ask whether he had obtained leave for doing so. For our own part, indeed, we think the course taken by Lord John immediately after his return home much more improper, viz: telling the expectant House of Commons nothing at all except that Russia was an ambitious and unscrupulous Power, all the time that he was whispering to a few inquisitive and leaky friends his assent to the Austrian proposal; but to say that he told the House of Friday night no more than it knew already, is, to say the least, a most surprising inaccuracy.

LORD RAGLAN'S LAST MOMENTS.

A letter from Sebastopol of the 20th ult., in the Semaphore of Marsilles, gives the following details of Lord Raglan's illness and death. His lordship was several days laboring under the influence of that singular malady which nearly resembles cholera, without having all the symptoms of it, but the physicians on the very morning of his death, had given it as their opinion that he was better, and that his state no longer caused uneasiness. His voice had regained its strength, he had been able to eat, and during the whole of the day hopes were entertained that all vestige of his indisposition would soon disappear. Lord Raglan himself said that he felt nearly well, but about half past six in the evening he was seized with a sudden faintness, and, without suffering the slightest pain, gradually sank, and in two hours after this crisis resigned his soul to God with a calmness and a tranquillity which it is impossible to describe. When the religious ceremonies have been performed his body will be removed from headquarters and conveyed to England by a war steamer, in charge of his aid-de-camp, Lord Burghersh, Lieutenant Colonel Somerset, Major Kingseote and Lieutenant Calthorpe.

OMAR PACHA.

A Constantinople correspondent of the Providence Journal gives the following account of the origin of Omar Pacha, which differs from previous statements. It has been said that he is a native of Croatia:—Omar Pacha is the great military genius and gallant general of the Turks. Under his leadership they know no danger, and perform prodigies of valor, while they are loth to face the foe under the command of officers in whom they have less confidence. He is said to be the son of a slave of the last Sultan, Mahmood, whose office was the charge of his children, a distinction among the Sultan's slaves. With the Turks, slavery is an affair altogether different from the same condition in the United States. The paths of honorable office and distinction are open to him, as to other subjects. He may aspire to the dignity of a vizier or a pacha. The idea of profit from their labor is not even a contingency which the master looks to. Their possession is a matter of pride, as it is an evidence of opulence, and they are treated for more like his own children than treated as objects of caprice, who are loth to minister to his luxury and hear the infliction of wrongs and cruelties without complaint. Let no American refer to Turkish slavery in excuse for ours.
