Friends in the South-Foes in the North. Wherever the friends of the constitution

Wherever the friends of the constitution are strong the Know-Nothings are contemptible in numbers and in influence. Wherever the enemies of the constitution are strong the Know-Nothings are powerful and numerous. If we follow these premises to their just conclusions, we shall find the whole question of "constitutionality," or of fidelity to the rights and equality of the State, reduced to a few simple and self-evident propositions.—Thus, where constitutional principles are strong the Know-Nothings make a show of devoted attachment to them; but as the Democratic party has always sustained these principles, and stands where it has stood for fifty years in regard to them, the Know-Nothings find their sudden efforts to outbid that party in the regard to them, the Know-Nothings and their sudden efforts to outbid that party in the public confidence a very bad speculation—especially in connection with their odious projects of religious intolerance and political proscription. On the other hand in all those quarters where the abolition sentiment is conscription. On the other hand in all those quarters where the abolition sentiment is controlling, the Know-Nothings are anxious to fuse with the abolitionists, and have done so, to a great extent, in nearly every northern State. Since their overwhelming defeat in the South, the partizans of the secret party are anxious to be more extreme on the question of southern rights than any of the old organizations; and it is now quite fashionable for them to urge the formation of exclusive southern combinations. On the other side, which is the reverse of the picture, the same party runs riot on the abolition question in the free States, and is as ready to swear in the words of Garrison and of Philips, as of any of the more consistent fanatics on the anti-slavery side.

We realize the utility of Know-Nothingism in its present position We realize, also, the value of its professions of nationality, the sincerity of its assaults upon the abolitionists, and the truth of its noisy vow against "the wild hunt for office"—Washington Union.

A WESTERN SERASTOPOL.—A despatch dated Petropaulovski, from Rear Admiral Fourichon of the French fleet, states, after briefly recapitulating the facts above enumerated, that the Russian garrison, numbering (as Le Journel informs us) some 1200 men, had doubtless sailed for the mouth of the Amoor river, which drains the southern portion of Siberia and flows in the gulf of Saghalien, an arm of the sea of Ochotsk. They left for this point on the 17th of April, and were doubtless there before the French and English arrived at Kamschatka. This river is regarded as the driving line between China and Asiatic Russia, and at its mouth is a very strong series of fortifications, which have been greatly strengthened from time to time by the Russians. It is thought by some of the officers of the obligado that the immense armament of Determined ship of Richland, to meet at the house of Jacob Kring in said township.
