

GEN. CASS ON RIFLE RELIGION.—Gen. Cass, in a letter to a committee at Boston, who had invited him to attend the Buchanan ratification meeting in that city, wrote: "Our business is worthy of our confidence, and besides their personal claims, they are the representatives of that great party of Washington and Jefferson and Jackson, which knows no country but the whole country; and no people but the whole American people; and which believes that if every portion of the republic were left to manage its affairs in its own way, without external interference, and if more charity and less violence were exhibited—more of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and less of Sharp's Rifles issued from the arsenals of some of the churches—that the good old days of peace and fraternal regard would soon return to cheer the land."

Fast men, like fast rivers, are generally the shallowest.
