ISAAC WIKE, Mer. Appraiser. April 22, 1857 New for the Million! Startling Outlay of Cash ! :

6,000 Dollars Worth of Clothing!!! A FULL SUMMER SUIT FOR $2,59

CAN be bought at the Excelsior Clothing Store Colonade Row, near the Court House, where

William Rosenberg would be happy to exhibit and sell to the citizens of Ebensburg and surrounding country, his new Spring stock of elegant and Cheap Clothing, just imported from the East. His assortment consists of COATS, VESTS and PANTALOONS, of every style and pattern, from the richest and most costly to the cheapest, together with a full supply of of Scarfs, Handkerchiefs, Shirts, Silk, Woolen and Cotton Undershirts, Linen and Cotton Drawers, Socks, Collars, Traveling Bags, &c. which he is determined to sell cheaper than any one clse—this he thinks he can do, because he purchases cheaper in the East, and has more capital in his particular line, than any competition; he is resolved to make it the pecuniary interest of all to buy from him, by selling so cheap, as to have no profit; his chief consideration at present

Then come along, 'tis just the thing, Our Clothing Store is handy; We have the fashions for the Spring. And fashions for the Dandy. Ebensburg, April 21, 1857.

[From Porter's Spirit.] AN ENCOUNTER WITH A PANTHER.

BY CLARA AUGUSTA.

William Glenn, a young, powerful and athletic man. left Portsmouth as early as the year 1794, and, with his wife and three year old daughter, traveled northward until the lofty tower of Mount Washington shut out the po-lar star. In a quiet secluded dell—now comprised in the township of Jackson-he fixed his rough log house, an built up his family altar. Broad acres of rich woodland, yet unmutilated by the destroying hand of civilization, stretched out their green, waving billows far toward Eilis' river, and the morning sunshine looked down on the dell with a wealth of life-giving power in its warm beams.

In truth, a lovelier spot than Crag Dell could not be found for leagues; and although the nearest human habitation was seven miles away, the Glenus were a happy family—liv-ing, as they did, in a little kingdom of their own, unmolested and untroubled.

Three years fled, and the wild, forbidding features which would have once struck a stranger so unfavorably, were almost entirely removed from Crag Dell. Wide fields of corn and wheat, ripe for the harvest, rustled where the stately forest monarchs had first nedded haughtily in the breeze. The log cabin was neater and more home-like in its appearance -the wild eglantine blossomed by the humble door-step, and clusters of purple-bosomed morning-glories twined lovingly around rude poles set in the earth beneath the one glass

The prettiest thing about the place was the blue-eyed little Maggie, the sweet child who stood by her mother's side, one magnificent September morning, and be gged to be allowed to go out to a knoll but a few rods from the cabin. for whortleberries, which grew very thick and large there. At first, Mrs. Glenn apprehended from rattlesnakes, which were own. quite numerous in the vicinity; but at last won over from discretion by two round, bright O. 201 LIBERTY STREET, near the mouth of Sixth st., Pittsburg. Pa., keep constantly on hand a supply of Old Monongabela and Rectified Whisky, Bacon, Fish, Flour, Lard. Oil, not to go out of sight of the cabin.

With a mother's pride and care did Mrs. Glenn watch the little form until she saw Maggie at the knoll busily engaged in capturing the delicious fruit; and then with a cheerful fice she re urned to her spinning.

Ever and anon, the busy hum of the wheel would cease, and the mother's face pressed the window, to see if Maggie still remained upon the knoll. At last she looked forth, and a frightful change fell upon her as she looked! Her cheek became white as ashes-a deathly writ, to and among the Judgment Creditors, here by gives notice, that he will attend to the duties have shricked, but her lips were sealed.

There, on the bold rock which overhung the knoll, where Maggie yet knelt in childish satisfaction, fast filling the bucket with blueberries-crouched an immense panther, evidently preparing for the fatal leap. Mothers! judge of the feelings of that mother! Far from human sid-her husband at work in the interval, two miles below-and a panther about to devour her only child! The golden hair would be dabbled in red blood; the lips which had so often been pressed to hers in the rich kiss of holy affection, would be torn and crushed between the ravenous jaws of the monster! That little body, now so warm and beautiful with life, in a moment would be a shapeless mass, gorging the fierce appetite of

In that hour Martha Glenn thought only of her child She reflected not on the danger to which she exposed herself in venturing forth in sight of the ter. ible animal. She remembered only that her child—the child she had nourished at her breast, and who, for six by gives notice that he will attend to the duties | happy years had slept in her bosom-was in peril. Forth she sped, her hands upraisedher eyes fixed in moveless agony upon the horrible tableau

The panther gave a low growl of delight, as his restless eye fell on his new victim; his tail lashed the ground in his rage; his red tongue gleamed savagely over his white, gleaming teeth, and his glaring eyes seemed living coals of fire !

Unheeding all-all but her child-the distracted mother sped on ; the low, sweet voice of her darling reaching her through the dead air-for Maggie was singing to herself a quaint old ballad of long ago. In an instant, Maggie was struggling in her mother's arms, and that mother, with the courage of despair, turned and attempted to reach her cabin with the precious burden she bore.

the panther raised himself upon his haunches er's' image freely to his heart. 'She is like grass-a wild, maddening snort, and his claws praise. Nor even when the hair turns silver heaps of mountain heather which grew every- ruffian mother-alas! that there are suchwhere in rich luxuriance, Mrs. Green prepared herself for the desperate and unequal struggle. Unequal indeed, for what was the strength of a frail woman opposed to the fury of a raging panther?

Already the fangs of the animal were fastened with an iron grip upon her left arm, the blood flowed in torrents down her disorher mind-she seized with her unconfined right hand the strong cord which fastened to her waist the long, sharp pointed shears, which were then deemed necessary to the toilet of every housewife. The glittering steel of that torn and mutilated arm! Not then did Mrs. Glenn yield! With certain death for herself, she would still save her child, and with desperate and determined bravery, she plunged the shears again and again into the neck of the infuriated beast! The combat grew terrific I grosus and howls filled the air, and Maggie shrunk beneath an overhanging rock, and hid her little face in her apron.

At length, by a lucky movement on the part of Mrs. Glenn, the panther's entire throat was cleft in twain, and unloosing his hold, he rolled upon the ground in a paroxysm of agony! Over and over—raising the dry, gray dust in clouds, in the struggle with death .-It lasted but a little while; there was a con-vulsive twitching of his strongly-defined mus-cles—a grating of his ponderous jaws, a dy-ing out of the light in his fiery eye, and he lay still, motionless-DEAD !

Though faint, and almost dving from pain and loss of blood, Mrs Glenn had sufficient presence of mind to crawl back to her bome, followed closely by Maggie, who could scaroely comprehend the terrible affeir. Drearily, and in the most intense suffering, passed the afternoon to the wounded mother; but in the smile which welled up from Maggie's blue eyes when standing beside her. she felt more than repaid for all she had already, and all she must in the future. endure for her child's

William Glenn was horror-stricken on returning from his labor, at the frightful condition of his wife. He dispatched his hired man eleven miles for the nearest physician, and with an anxious hope and fear he awaited his arrival. At last-it was near day-break-the man came. After gravely examining the case, be pronounced amputation of the mutilated limb the only means of preserving life. Mrs. Glenn did not flinch from the trying ordeal, but bore herself throughout with Roman fortitude.

Maggie Glenn grow up a good and beautiful woman-her love for her mother the one great, holy and sanctified trait in her lovely character. Early in life, she was united to a hardy young mountaineer, who took her fardemurred, for there was much danger to be ther east to live in a pleasant home of his

The old shears are preserved as an heirloom-a token of their ancestor's prowessby Maggie's descendants, and if you wish to make them (the descendants-not the shears) eloquent, just ask them to tell you all about Mrs. Glenn's encounter with a panther.

"A Chip from the Old Block."

There is no disputing the fact; it shines in the face of every little child. The coarse, brawling, scolding woman will have coarse, vicious, brawling, fighting chidren. She who cries on every occason, "Pil box your ears-I'll slap your jaws-I'll break your neck;" is known as thoroughly through her children as if her unwomanly manners were openly displayed in the public street.
