Miscellaneous.

Niagara Falls in Winter.

Have you ever, asks a correspondent of the New York Commercial, seen this mighty cataract and its surroundings when the Frost King held sway over them? If not you have never yet seen Niagara in its greatest beauty and marvelousness.—From above the great fall, down both sides of the river to below the ferry, every tree and shrub is encased in frozen spray—not ice, like frozen water simply, but a pure, solid, white mass, granular, like fine marble—the perpendicular cliffs columned with mighty icicles, which appear like vast supports to these eternal walls of stone. Flashing in the sunlight, the whole scene as you approach the river's bank dazzles sight and brings to mind all the glories of the fairy scenes whereof we read in that child's book of enchantment, the "Arabian Nights." Luna Island—Little Luna—from across the stream, looks, with her stunted cedars weighed down and covered with this frost work, like a heard of white elephants; but when you go over to it, and walk in under, as you can, you are really in a grotto of diamonds—the bright sun shining down and giving an appearance of splendor not elsewhere to be found. The eddies have clogged and cemented the cakes of ice that came down over the falls, and a bridge is formed for foot passengers, and seemingly strong enough to bear a horse. Of this, as there is nothing to pay for crossing and looking, (a wonder of the Niagara's wonder) numbers hourly take advantage. Standing on mid river and looking upward, the scene is imposingly grand and beautiful. With a pole I measured through the different fissures to ascertain the thickness of the ice, and found it was nearly fifteen feet.

Getting as near mid river as I could, I "spread myself," and stood on the water with one foot on Queen Victoria's dominions, the other on our own. The scene by moonlight and starlight is equally beautiful, standing on the ice, the flashing of the water and the brightness reflected from the ice enabled me to read easily the ordinary print of a newspaper. Believe me, Niagara in winter will repay a journey from the extremest point of our country, and it is surprising that so few take advantage of the facilities for reaching it, and witnessing the glorious burst of radiance which nature at this season there spreads out.

Better in Theory than in Practice.

Not many years ago two young Frenchman—one wealthy and in possession of ready cash, the other poor and penniless—occupied by chance the same room in a suburban hotel. In the morning the seedy one rose first, took from his pocket a pistol and holding it to his own forehead, and backing against the door, exclaimed to his horrified companion:—"It is my last desperate resort; I am penniless and tired of life; give me five hundred francs, or I will instantly blow out my brains, and you will be arrested as a murderer!" The other passenger found himself the hero of an unpleasant dilemma, but the cogency of his companion's argument struck him "cold;" he quietly crept to his pantaloons handed over the amount, and the other vamoosed after locking the door on the outside. Hearing of this, another Frenchman of very savage aspect, one night contrived to room with a tall rawboned gentlemon from Arkansas, who had been rather free of his money during the day, and evidently had plenty more behind. Next morning "Pike," awaking, discovered his room mate standing over him with a pistol levelled at his own forehead, and evidently quaking with agitation. "What in —— are you standin' thar for in the cold?" asked Pike, propping himself on his elbow, and cooly surveying the Gaul. "I am desperati!" was the reply; "you gives to me one hundred dollar or I blow out mine prains!" "Well, then blow and be dammed!" replied Pike, turning over. Bote you vill be arrest for ze meutre," persisted Gaul, earnestly. "Eh what's that?" said Pike, "oh, I see!" and suddenly drawing a revolver and a large bowie from under his pillow, he sat upright. "A man may as well be hung for a sheep as a lamb," he coolly shouted; and at the word he started for the Gaul, but the latter was too nimble—the "hoss pistol," innocent of lead, exploded in the air, and with one frantic leap our little Frenchman was standing in his night robe at the foot of the staircase. A proof that what may suit one latitude will not always answer for anotehr.

The Smelling Committee.—The style, says the Washington Evening Star, in which the majority of Mr Covode's committee are discharging their duties, is in fair keeping with that inaugurated by the never-to-be-forgotton "Hiss Committe" of the Massachusetts Legislature. Washington is full of jokes concerning the way in which Mr. C. is peeping under the political beds he comes across, and peeping into the contents of what he imagines he finds there. So far, however, he has found literally nothing. In finding it, he has exhibited to the world the fact that his purpose is not to seek for truth, but rather, for some god-send malevolent gossip, out of which he hopes to be able to manufacture some dirty charge as Hiss was looking up when nosing in the dormitories of the religious house in Charlestown, Massachusetts.
