A Biography.

Prentice, of the Louisville Journal, has lately turned his attention to writing the biogaaphies of some of his old political associates. The following graphic extract is from that of Horace Greeley.

"Horace Greeley was born in Oregon, near the conflux of the Astoria. During his infancy he subsisted entirely upon roots and berbs, and was remarkable for wearing a copper stock about his neck .- He sailed to this in Helper's book: "Not to be an abolitionist ployment as a gardener, but in attempting to the devil." bis wages, he left the weed and invented Slievegammon fund; was elected a member of rights of the white man Congress, and immediately after requested limited capital."

In such a crisis it efforts that will firmly consolidate the opposition to our common political enemy. It is simply a question between Republicanism and Democracy; and, as such, it is committed with confidence to the calm good sense of the people of Pennsylvania

It cannot be denied that the union of the Democratic party will result in a brilliant triumph in October. On that initial battle all our energies must be concentrated. We have a leader worthy of our cause With an enthusiasm never before equalled in any political assemblage, Henry D. Foster, of Westmoreland, was selected as our standard bearer in that important contest. He did not seck the nomination. He repeatedly declined being a candidate for the office. When struggling partisans met at Reading to advance the interests of their peculiar favorites, he remained in the quiet retirement of his own home, with no thought of personal advancement, and anxious only for the success of Democratic principles.-The presentation of his name to the Convention was met by a prempt withdrawal, at his urgent solicitation. But when the voice of the people ucanimous-ly proclaimed him the leader of the party in his native Commonwealth, he did not refuse to obey the call to duty, yet seeking no prety qualification.
