WORRY .- Don't you know that multitude of human beings turn away from the many blessings of their lot, and dwell and brood upon its worries? Don't you know that multitudes persistently look away from the numerous pleasant things they might contemplate, and look fixedly, and constantly, at painful and diagreea-ble thing? You sit down, my friend in your snug library, beside the evening fire. The blast is hardly heard through the drawn curtaing .-Your wife is there, and your two grown up daughters, on feel thankful that, after the bustle of the day, you have the quiet retreat where you may rest and refit yourself for another day, with its bustle. But the conversation goes on. Nothing is talked of but the failings of the servants, and the idleness and impudence of your boys; unless indeed, it be the supercilious bow with which Mr. Snooks that afternoon passed your wife, and the fact that the pleasant dinner-party at which you assisted the evening before at Mr. Smith's, has been ascertained to be one of the second rate character, his more honored guests having dined on the previous day .--Every petty disagreeable in your lot, in short, is brought out turned ingeniously in every possible light, and aggravated and exagerated to the highest degree. The natural and necessary result follows. An hour or less of this dicipline, brings all parties to a sulky and snapping frame of mind. And instead of the cheerful and thank ful mood in which you were disposed to be when you sat down, you find that your moral nature is jarred and out of gear. And your wife, your daughters, and yourself pass into moody, sullen silence over your books-books which you are not likely for this evening to mush appreciate or enjoy. Each horse has a large stall to himself, with his name over the top, and his manger is constructed of black marble. We were then shown all the state carriages, some of which were leaded with gilding and lired with white satin; then came all the saddles, which were very elegant; and when we had visited the whole, we did not wonder that such a grand card of admission was necessary for the establishment.'
