(BY REQUEST.) For the Democrat and Sentinel. LINES WRITTEN ON THE DEATH OF GALLITZEN EBERLY.

Our home. Oh, how lonely and dreary, Since the star of our circle has fled, Our hearts seem broken, wretched and Since Gallitzen our darling is dead,

Where all was once sunshine, 'we see nought but gloom, Since his smiles and his laughter we we miss, His form is now mouldering to dist in the tomb.

But his spririt is revelling in bliss.

We know that his pure spirit hath flown, To realms celestial and fair. Where the trials and cares of this world are unknown, For sorrow has ne'er entered there.

Yet we grieved when we found that the cold hand of death, Was lain on his soft brow of snow.

When stilled his warm heart and ceased his low breath When we saw him thus prostrate and

When we saw we must part with our sweet priceless gem, For as such we have cherished him

When sparkling with beauty, laughter out further notice. and glee, We knew not that death hovered near.

To blight a sweet life so sinless and bright. Yet so brief it seemed but a dream Like the rainbow it faded at once from our sight. Like flowers 'neath the burning sun's

But the rainbow again in it splender may shine,

The flowers revive as before, But no power of this world, no period of Can to us our lost treasure restore.

But 'tis soothing to us, though our darling is dead. To think we so meekly have given.

And restored him thus back to the One who has said. "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." MAGGIE L. GRANDEL
