

The Past and Present.

[From the Patriot and Union]

The Democratic party is charged by the Abolition press with hostility to the Administration, and that hostility is denominated "treason."

There was a period in the early career of this Administration when the North was a unit in its support, when no party demonstration was made against it, or factious opposition raised to paralyze its arm, or withheld from it the men and money it demanded to put down rebellion.

Has not the country already suffered enough in its desolate homes, its bereaved families, its loads of taxation and debt and its exhausted resources, that this fell spirit of Abolitionism must still persist in an indefinite prolongation of the sacrifice, by perverting and complicating the issues of this war, and rendering the Union impossible, except upon terms incompatible with our federative system and degrading to a free and self-governing people?

Is it not time for the Democracy, for all conservative men, to combine and rescue the government from that ineffectual and misrule which are fast paving the way to bondage for the white as well as the black? It is the slave to sectional prejudice and animosity, and not the Southern slave, which is the great obstacle to the successful consummation of this war, and which must be emancipated by the conservative action of the people before peace and the Union can be restored.

Thus, in one view, have we presented the past and the present, as an answer to all the Abolition press can say. Every word of it is true. Much might be added, but enough has been said—enough to show the fidelity of the Democratic party to the Constitution and the eternal principles that underlie it—enough to rebuke those through whose wicked agency the Union has been rent asunder and the land drenched with the best blood of its citizens.

Whenever the Administration shall cast loose from the foul embrace of treasonable Abolitionism; whenever it shall retrace its course, and fall back upon the sound, safe, constitutional, civilized and statesmanlike policy upon which it originally started, making a restored Union and honorable peace the only objects of this horrible war, it will find itself again supported, cheered and sympathized with by that formidable and controlling body of American citizens whom, in an hour of fatal blindness, it rudely thrusts from its confidence, preferring to place its trust in those infernal spirits whose touch is pollution and their counsel death.

While conscious that the country has been subjected to this terrible calamity by the wickedness of radical Abolitionists, who endeavor to shield themselves from the just odium of their conduct by loud and empty professions of patriotism, the Democratic party are ready, as they ever have been, to do whatever may become loyal citizens to put down this rebellion and repair, as far as possible, the terrible mischief which they had no hand in bringing upon the country.

The Democratic party are ready to submit to any sacrifice for the sake of the Union, but they are not willing to sacrifice themselves and the great interests of the country for any other cause, or ulterior purpose. They are submissionists to the real and legitimate exigencies of the Union, but not to the exigencies or ends of fanaticism.

On the contrary, says the Boston Post, those who stigmatize them as submissionists to rebellion are themselves ready to submit to amnesty, disunion, and even military despotism, for the sake of carrying out their emancipation projects.

despotism, for the sake of carrying out their emancipation projects. The difference is, that the latter make the negro, and the former the Union, the sine qua non of their political action.
